GENERAL SHERMAN IN CAMP.-The following extract by Major Ward Nichols, formerly of Sherman's staff, gives a good picture of the General as many of his followers have often seen him at his headquarters at a late hour of the night :

"The canvas cover, toward which the eyes of both were now eagerly directed, was open from the front, so that the slightest movement of its inmate could be observed from the outside. They could see that the General had risen from his cot. Thrusting his bare feet into a pair of slippers, he unrolled from a scrap of newspaper a cigar, and then stepped out from such protection as the tent offered from the falling dew into the open ground. He looked up into the sky, and then out into the darkness, in an absent, half-abstracted way.

"The night air was chilly and the camp fire had burned low. Gathering the ends of the charred rails together, he heaped them upon the still smouldering ashes, then, taking a camp stool from the tent. he sat down before the fire, which had now kindled into a blaze; he lighted his eigar, and, with his elbows resting upon his knees, gazed earnestly into the bed of coals and flame.

"The bright light shone full into that iron face, marked with strong lines of thought and care. The bold forehead seemed to project itself higher and broader among the short growth of cross-grained hair. The light caught upon the unbuttoned wristband, caking a warmer glow from the red shirt hardly covering his bare neck.

"A strange, grand figure was this sitting there, whose subtle brain at that moment was working out one of the great events in the fate of the nation.

"The flames of the fire now gathered new strength, flaring up into the night and revealing the interior of the tent in clearer outline. There was a singular simplicity, almost a poverty, marking the headquarters of the great captain.

"The tent was a single piece of cotton cloth stretched from a ridge pole, where it was held firm to the ground on either side by wooden pegs. A cross-legged camp cot, a small camp chest, which is half covered by the uniform thrown upon it, make up the scanty furniture. Beside a single candle burned to its socket, and to sell a better article, than any other there lies a volume of Waverly. A letter | dealer in town. book answers for a waiting table; a valise is the General's only traveling

"A number of maps, some opened, and all well worn, lie upon the blanket, which answers for a floor to the tent. There was very little pretension about this menage of the commander, who had million's at his disposal. There was no Roman Consul nor modern Emperor traveling in grand state, with pompous mein and brilliant retinue, but a citizen general of the Republic, not borrowing dignity from adventitious surroundings, but, in the simplicity of an unselfish devotion to his country, doing the work which lay before

"There was a weird grandeur, supernaturally picturesque, in this intense stillness, this silent, motionless figure, of FLOUR. the chief of thousands of strong men, who slept while he sat watching, the central figure in the grand picture. In the spectral fire-light it seemed almost alone, for the line of tents receded in the darkness on either side. The moon now and then burst through the masses of heavy clouds, revealing groups of tents on the distant hill-side; horses and mules were crouched upon the ground; while behind them rose a forest of pines, filled with the mysterious shadows and graceful tree-tops melting into the veil of blue."
