THURSDAY, MAY 2, 1867.

REPUBLICAN CONVENTION!—The "Republican State Convention" will meet at the "Herdic House," in Williamsport, on Wednesday, 26*th* of June next, at 10 o'clock, a. m., to nominate a candidate for Judge of the Supreme Court, and to initiate proper measures for the ensuing State canvass.

As heretofore, the Convention will be composed of Representative and Senatorial Delegates, chosen in the usual way, and equal in number to the whole of the Senators and Representatives in the General Assembly.

By order of the State Central Committee.

F. JORDAN, Chairman.

GEO. W. HAMERSLY, A. W. BENEDICT, J. ROBLEY DUNGLISON, } Secretaries.

The "Nigger."

Northern Democrats find it grievously hard no longer to maintain their old cry of "abolition," "nigger-worshiper," &c.—The stern logic of events seems bound to make that same negro-hating Democrat the eulogist and political compatriot, if not the bosom companion, of Sambo and Gumbo, Julius Cæsar and Hannibal.—"Come into my parlor," said the historical spider to the no less historical fly. Come, O, come, to our arms, say the reconstructed Democrats of the South. What will Northern Democracy do? Othello, with his occupation of killing cats clean gone forever, was in a similar though not so bad a fix as the Democrat of to-day, for Othello was not tied to the carcass of one of his victims. But Sambo, curly headed as he may be, flat nosed, too, and with a protuberant heel as of yore, has a vote—a vote as potent as his late master's or his still later defamer's, and if modern Democracy has forgotten how to revere justice for mere justice' sake, it has not forgotten how to worship a ballot even though bound in wool and cased in ebony. All on a sudden the Democracy of the North cease to abuse the hitherto ill-fated son of Africa. All on a sudden the Democracy of the South begin to court him. A single twenty-four hours transforms him from deformity to beauty, from a thing to a man, from an object of detestation and abuse to a subject for flattery. North of Mason and Dixon's line, he ceases to be openly defamed; south of it, his praises float in the air. Wade Hampton sweats, writes, petitions, makes orations, and does all that pen and tongue, soul and body can do to prevent his dear colored brother, whom he so recently thought to show more to advantage on the auction block than elsewhere, from picking his friends from those to whom he owes his freedom and elevation. At Nashville this same ex-rebel-Democratic-conservative element gave pressing invitations to their "colored fellow-citizens" to "come into their convention" and "take part in their deliberations." Report, apparently trustworthy, has it that they pressed certain blacks to take seats among them, against their will. In Richmond, the emancipated blacks hold a meeting, called for themselves, but attended by many whites, who consent to be presided over by a colored president, who address him just as they would a white, and carry on one of the cleverest courtships of this or any other age, and all for the advantage of the Democratic party. Hopeful party. Yesterday, kicking the black; to-day, kissing him. But the kicks are too recent to be healed by the kisses. Meanwhile the freedmen keep on advancing with astonishing rapidity, confounding their enemies, pleasing their friends, casting lustre upon universal liberty and equality, and making manifest that the logic of slavery was a cheat, a lie and a swindle. We ask attention to the following words of a Richmond correspondent, himself a Southerner and a secessionist:

"We of the South fully expected that he would be so negligent and improvident, when free, that starvation would be the lot of his race in any part of the earth whose productions are not spontaneous. That, from habit, inclination, and necessity, he would ignore all the ties of family obligation; but in this, also, we have been equally mistaken. Most of us felt convinced, too, that he would be an unresisting victim of that fell destroyer of the white and the red man—intemperance; but the contrary is happily the case. In fact, a more orderly, unrevengeful, provident, and temperate laboring class is not to be found anywhere than we have in our midst. Meagre as their earnings are, yet most of them strive to the utmost to lead quiet and peaceful lives, to adhere to and shelter their families and educate their children; few are given to brawls and other species of dissipation, cultivating habits of economy, cleanliness, industry, and good conduct in general, to the surprise of those most disposed to doubt their fitness for freedom or self-government. No where, however, have they exhibited this general capacity to better advantage than in their participation in the recent Republican State Convention held in this city. A vast majority of them had been slaves all their lives until recently, and a more orderly, discreet, and conciliatory body of men cannot be found among any peasantry on earth, as a whole. Decided talent, too, was by no means rare among them; in fact, malice itself was silenced; and the discretion that governed their action will best be understood from the result of their labors. The writer of this heard a gentleman of most extensive obervation in deliberate assemblies remark that a Convention conducted with more decorum he had never attended, and that, to his great astonishment, many of the speeches of the more talented bore very favorable comparison with the major part of those delivered in our Legislature now in session. So it would seem that, henceforth, the negro, in the South, is not only an institution, but an element which is destined at no remote period to wield a not unimportant influence in uprooting the prejudices of centuries.

"May his career continue onward and upward, for the good of himself, the land he lives in, for the honor of the human race, and the glory of the God that created us all."

The Legislature.

From every section of the State, without regard to party, come denunciations of the late Legislature. These denunciations are generally well deserved. Two acts of that body, however, are worthy of honor, and tend to some extent to redeem it from the deep execration in which it is held. The first of these is the law directing that hereafter the people shall elect two jury commissioners, no person voting for more than one, whose duty it shall be to frame the list of jurors to serve at each court.—As the law has heretofore stood, justice was in many instances denied. Whenever political feeling entered into any controversy before a jury, it was as apt to be decided according to the prevailing politics of the county as to the evidence.—By the change authorized by the Legislature, the political complexion of juries will be equally divided between the two great political parties of the State. The other act for which we commend the Legislature is that prohibiting the exclusion of colored persons from the street cars of Philadelphia. It is an act altogether wise and good. Hereafter, Wade Hampton will not have it in his power to reproach the people of our State with making distinctions that are unknown even to many cities of the South. For these two acts, we thank the Legislature, and willingly hold them up to the public gaze as in contrast with many other acts done or refused to be done by the same body which are as disgraceful as these are honorable.

Sunday---Its Observance.

The Blair County Whig publishes the speech of Hon. Louis W. Hall in opposition to the bill by which the people of Philadelphia were to decide for themselves whether or not the street cars should be run in their city on Sunday. The argument of the speech is that Sunday is part of the Christian religion and the Christian religion is part of the common law of the State. It is a doctrine that to us seems to be the offspring of a zealot, a bigot, or a demagogue, well calculated to tickle the ear and captivate the fancy of simple religious people, who desire to honor and to promote the Christian faith, but which, under an exterior so fair as to appear almost angelic, hides the foundation of all the persecutions, the burnings, and the rackings of the past, for it is only a cunning way of binding the Church to the State, and of enabling the Legislature to declare what is heresy and what is gospel. Pursued to its logical results, and it is as horrid as the burning fagot and the screaming victim. There are other and better grounds on which to base the observance of Sunday.

THE Republican convention to meet at Williamsport on June 26th will have but one nomination to make, that of a candidate for Judge of the Supreme Court, in place of Chief Justice Woodward. Hon. George Taylor, President Judge of this Judicial District, seems likely to be the nominee, and it is simple justice to say of him that his eminent fitness for the position should make him a strong candidate. We hope his nomination will not be urged because his district or section deserves it, but because he is competent and worthy, and will be a candidate worthy of the people's suffrages.

WE call the attention of our readers to the letter of Col. John P. Linton, to be found on the outside of to-day's paper, concerning the manner in which the change of venue from this to Centre county was effected in the suits familiarly known as the Railroad cases. There is said to be a point when affairs get to be as bad as they well can be, at which there is invariably a change for the better. We seem to be rapidly nearing that point.—But before we get to it, we would be gratified to see tested the validity of this act so rotten with fraud.

IT is generally conceded among sagacious politicians that the Democracy of Pennsylvania will not nominate a candidate for Supreme Judge, because they do not want a State defeat in Pennsylvania before the Presidential election of 1868. If they nominate a Supreme Judge candidate, he will, of course, be defeated, which defeat would demoralize the Democracy at the Presidential election of 1868; but the ruse to escape defeat in 1868 by not nominating in 1867 will avail the Democracy naught.

LATE advices say that a general conference of European powers to settle the differences threatening the peace of Prussia and France will be held in London on the 15th instant.

☞ The Philadelphia Press gives the following concise idea of the situation in Europe: "The King of Holland, who is also Grand Duke of Luxemburg, has sold his little Luxemburg farm to Napoleon, but cannot make a good title, being unable to convey the possession clear of Prussian incumbrances."

☞ Sanford Conover, who testified on the trial of the assassination conspirators, and also before the House Judiciary Committee, that Jeff. Davis and other ex-rebel leaders were actively concerned in the assassination plot, has been found guilty of perjury in so testifying, and was on Friday sentenced to ten years in the New York State Prison.

☞ A Bedford paper says that an enterprising citizen has lately erected a new house in that town, and adds that it is so long since the inhabitants have seen anything of the kind, that should the owner charge a small fee for permission to view it, the fund accumulating would pay all expenses incurred in its erection.

☞ The Richmond Examiner gravely announces that every Southern man who votes with the Republican party "endorses the murder of Mrs. Surratt." An assertion that every man who votes against the Republican party endorses the assassination of Abraham Lincoln would be equally well founded, and decidedly more pertinent to the issues of the day.

THE RAILROADS OF OUR STATE.—The statistics of the railroads of Pennsylvania, as presented in the report of the Auditor General for the last year, are not only interesting but wonderful. Two hundred and sixty-seven and a half millions of dollars have been expended on the steam roads, which in length extend over four thousand miles in main lines alone. The receipts of the various companies amount to almost seventy-one millions of dollars. No wonder they can build palaces of depots, and span every rivulet with iron bridges, which are in beauty and elegance a work of art.

These statistics develop one item which is so extremely comforting and pleasant that we like to dwell upon it. The railroads of the Commonwealth carried last year 17,724,216 through passengers—all the passengers killed during the year amounting to but thirteen. This makes one passenger killed out of every 1,364,170½ carried. In other words, a person traveling in Pennsylvania stands only one and a third millionth of a chance of losing his life. This infinitesimal risk should smoothe the nerves of all the timid and fearful people for whom a journey is a thing more venturesome and frightful than a campaign or battle to a soldier.—Only to think of it! A veteran would be ashamed to enter an engagement when the risk was so small. At this ratio the killed in all the war, out of both armies, would not equal five men.

It is a painful tribute to their fidelity and heroism to find that the employees of the road—the heroes of the rail—an infinitely small class when compared with the millions of passengers, outnumber them in "killed" more than twelve to one. This simple heroic fact tells its own story, and what a story of devotion and intrepidity it is! No encomiums or panegyrics of ours could do them the honor of their own grand deeds.

THE LATEST PHILADELPHIA HORROR.—On Friday last, Mrs. Dorcas Magilton, aged sixty-two, was murdered at her husband's residence. It seems the husband, Mr. Adam Magilton, aged seventy-five, left his dwelling about three o'clock p. m., for a store near by, to make a purchase. On returning he was admitted to his house by a young man named George W. Winemore, who informed him that his wife was murdered. He accompanied Winemore to the kitchen, and there a horrible sight met his vision.—Extended on the floor lay the wife, her skull crushed in with blows from a hammer, and her throat cut from ear to ear. The hammer was close to her head, but no knife or other sharp instrument could be found in the room, with which the throat had been cut. A razor belonging to Winemore was subsequently found in the yard attached to the premises. The murdered woman was the mother of Gen. Joseph Magilton, one of the brave brigade commanders of the Pennsylvania Reserve Corps. Winemore, who was recently discharged from the regular army, was on friendly terms with the family, and took his meals at their house. The motive of the murderer is unknown. He was promptly arrested, and committed to prison.

THE REPUBLICAN CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE.—The following is a list of the Republican Congressional Committee, selected from the general Congressional Committee, which is now engaged in Washington city in aiding the loyalists of the South in carrying through the coming political reconstruction campaign:

Robert C. Schenck, Representative, Ohio, Chairman.
John Conness, Senator, California.
Zachariah Chandler, Senator, Michigan.
William D. Kelley, Representative, Pennsylvania.
John A. Logan, Representative, Illinois.
John M. Broomall, Representative, Pennsylvania.
Oakes Ames, Representative, Massachusetts.
Thomas L. Tullock, Secretary.
William S. Huntingdon, Cashier First National Bank, Washington, D. C., Treasurer.

OF COURSE NOT.—It is ostentatiously announced that Paul Bagley, who claims to have been formerly a missionary to India and Japan—though a missionary for what is not said—went on a mission last week to Fortress Monroe to try to persuade Jefferson Davis to condescend to ask for a pardon. Mr. Davis declined, of course. Oysters, mutton-chops, and martyrdom are not to be had all together more than once in a life-time. We suggest to this amateur missionary, since he is desirous of testing his powers of persuasion, that he go to Europe and persuade Bismark not to hector France.

—A letter from Ireland says that another outbreak may be expected soon—organized from London, Paris and Dublin. The Fenians in America are much criticised and generally held in contempt.—The writer says: That the attempt will be everywhere successful I do not for a moment believe; but I know that if it is unsuccessful, another and final effort will be made in June next in connection with certain revolutionary movements on the continent of Europe and in England.
