An Element of Discord.

During the rebellion, that portion of the Democratic party which did not entertain a willingness, not to say a desire, that Jefferson Davis and his confederates would succeed in establishing a confederacy of the Southern States, was always anxious that in its efforts to restore supremacy the government would glove its fists before striking its foes. There seemed to exist a native and irradicable sympathy between the body of the Democracy and the men in arms against the nation. If not every, then next to every, person who was engaged in the effort to overthrow the national supremacy had at some period of his life voted or shouted for Democracy. Jefferson Davis had been a life-long Democrat; Toombs and Stephens had abancloned the Whigs to fellowship with the Democratic brethren; Slidell and Mason were both among the faithful; Yancey, Beauregard, and Quantrell were orthodox in the faith; Breckinridge had been a sort of high priest among his fellows; and, in fact, the rebellion was made up of Democrats, for its head was Democratic and its tail of the same material, and why shouldn't the two fragments, the one lying North and the other South of a supposed line, be in cordial sympathy? But, alas, an evil day has come. What was once the bond of union is about to become the apple of discord. Once, Democracy South and Democracy North both agreed that Sambo was a good chattel, was the most ornamental thing that could be placed upon an auction-block, was the most convenient animal in all this world. But this self-same Sambo, being now a man, contemplated by the law to be of full stature, a creature vested with certain rights, and, in the South, endowed with the privilege of the ballot, the sensible men of the South, who really desire to put an end to the present abnormal condition of affairs, and to see their section exercising its influence in the councils of the nation, announce themselves ready to accept accomplished facts as such, to treat their former slaves as men, and generally to wheel in with the march of events .-What a beautiful prospect for Northern Democracy to reinstate itself in the South and assume at least a moiety of its former prestige in the Union! Again we say, alas for the vanity of human hopes !for the two parts of the once glorious Democracy that heretofore dovetailed together with closest fit now refuse to join, and the whole secret of the calamity is, that Democracy South has learned something during the six years last past, while in the same time Democracy North has learned nothing, absolutely nothing. Democracy South consents to allowing Sambo a man's estate, and to go with him to the polls, and to sit with him in political gatherings, and to solicit him for his suffrage, but Democracy North turns sick at the thought, and, in Pennsylvania, declares it can't, it won't, and it shan't, swallow the nasty nigger-coated pill. In this emergency, when Northern Democracy turns out to be of no use to anybody here, to be on bad terms with its friends in Europe victimized into taking the bonds of its other friends of the confederacy, we advise it to go aboard ship and endesvor to creep into one of the ports of Japan. Perhaps it will not there be counted an antediluvian fossil.

That Convention.

The Democratic Convention which recently assembled at Harrisburg arraigned the Republican portion of the late Legislature for violating pledges made to the people. The Convention seemed very conveniently to forget the part taken by Democratic members in defrauding the popular will. The notable instance in which the desire of the people was shamefully thwarted was the failure to enact a free Railroad law, to the defeat of which Democratic members contributed no small if we mistake not, was Col. Linton, representative from Cambria. If the Democratic convention really intended to favor such a law, why did it not put itself on record by a resolution. It virtually rethe men who prevented the existence of two republics within the limits of the United States; it declared itself inflexibly opposed to the enfranchisement of the held at Reading on the 14th of August. negro in Pennsylvania, although there is no such issue before the people; and surely, had it been in carnest in the matter, it could have found words and paper enough to have framed and recorded a resolution favoring the enactment of such a law.

Maximilian.

There is something romantic in the fate of Maximilian and his attempt to establish an empire in Mexico. A prince of the oldest royal house in Europe and brother of the reigning emperor, supported as well by the power of his own as of the French nation, seeks to enthrone himself over a people who owe him no allegiance, who are bound to him by no ties, who hold nothing in common with him, save religious faith. To this project, that ordinarily would seem hazardous in the extreme, and worthy to spring only from the brain of the wildest of fanatics or the most hazardous of mere adventurers, an appearance of sober calculation and a fair prospect of success are given, by the distracted and feud-torn condition of the nation over whom he would force himself the ruler, as also by the prevalence of a gigantic civil strife in the only nationality likely to interfere for the prevention of his dazzling scheme.

So opportune was the moment, so vigorously was the design pressed toward consummation, that every important city and post in the heart of Mexico had fallen into the hands of the invader, the city that was once the capital of the Republic became the capital of the monarchy, from which the usurper denounced as worthy only of death those few who composed the shattered remnant of the Republican army and those other few who sympathized with it in its struggles, and gave it whatever aid lay in their power. The conqueror felt secure upon his throne, and the world was settling into the conviction that the establishment of a monarchy upon the borders of the United States was a consummated fact. But the bright vision has vanished. The newly robed empress, foreseeing disaster, fled to her own and kindred people to beseech aid for the throne then tottering and now fallen. Disappointed in her hopes, her reason left her, and now she is a maniac in close confinement. Her husband is a prisoner in the hands of those whom he wronged, and if his life is spared, he will owe it to the magnanimity of his captors, and the interference in his behalf of those same United States whose expected and much desired dissolution presented to his view the golden moment for the establishment of his dynasty. In all this is a lesson no less for Europe than America. Fiction is not so strange as truth proves itself to be in this instance.

THE Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune says that letters and telegrams have been received by the Union Congressional Executive Committee from enough members of Congress to insure a quorum in July, so that a short summer session is a fixed fact. A number of the letters received from Republican members state that they will come on condition that the session shall not last over two weeks, or three weeks at the furthest .-They do not wish to proceed with the regular business of Congress, but merely to fix definitely the Reconstruction Act, so that President Johnson and Mr. Stanbery will be prevented hereafter from giving any more trouble and hindering reconstruction. It is evident also from the tone of the other letters received that an attempt will be made to have Speaker Colfax announce the committees immediately, so as to be able to go right to work. This plan is favored by those anxious to impeach the President, and by others who are opposed to Secretary M' Culloch's present financial policy, especially in respect to the present system of National Banks. Those who are in favor of a long session say if once a quorum is obtained the session will be kept up, long enough to settle definitely the question of impeachment.

THE colored men of this State have organized an Equal Rights League, and published a sensible address to their brethren throughout the State, urging them to combine and form associations for securing "equality before the law, and a share, and among the opponents of which, fair chance in the race of life." "Let us be a unit," they urge, "in this great moral struggle, and do not let either friend or too imagine that we are indifferent spectators to a scene that so much concerns us, or so little enlightened as to be incasolved treason to be no crime; it denounced pable of organization and systematic effort." They have taken for their motto, Industry, Frugality, and Education. The next annual meeting of the League will be

Owing to a press of other business, the Republican Executive Committee of Cambria county failed to convene on the 13th instant, to choose a delegate to the Williamsport Convention. Leading Rebels in England.

Col. Forney, in a recent letter, gives NEW the following personal information: CASH "But the most significant of all these indications is, as I have said, the fate which has overtaken the Confederate cause and the Confederate leaders. The failure of Frazer, Trenholm & Co., the great house at Liverpool through which the rebels carried on their enormous transactions in cotton, constructed and sent out their iron-clad navy, and paid their agents in Europe and Canada, will lead to some rich disclosures. Our Government, under the sagacious counsels of Hon. Charles Francis Adams, the American minister in London, bad anticipated this catastrophe, and will take care to receive, with the aid of the British courts, whatever may be left from the wreck of this once proud and all-defying organization. Not less significant is the present condition of the most of the Confederate leaders in London and Paris. John C EARTHENWARE AND STONEWARE, IRON. Breckinridge is frequently seen at the Langham Hotel, where I am stopping, wofully changed in appearance, if not in opinions. A gentleman who conversed with him a few days ago says that Breckinridge did not hesitate to declare against the good taste of the defeated rebel leaders claiming any rights under the Constitution which they had repudiated and the Government they had vainly sought to destroy, and that, whatever others might do, he proposed to submit to fate. Mr. Benjamin is the counsel of the celebrated C. K. He is also said to be the American editor of the London Telegraph, and the writer of the articles that now delight the Tory readers of that pretended Liberal paper, eulogistic of Jefferson Davis and the "Lost Cause."-The well-known George N. A writer in an English paper gives the following account of a singular superstition connected with the steamship Great

"She is a ship with two cases, or skins s they are called; that is, she is almost like one ship fitted inside another. Between the inner and outer skin, workmen can crawl for repairs. Dreadfully dark and sepulchral, of course, it is in there, for, from the nature of the space, the workmen must be completely closed in, excepting at the spot at which he enters. Very few smiths or shipwrights would care to work in her alone, for two terrible specters are supposed to haunt the place. Almost all the men who were engaged in the construction of the vessel believe that, somewhere there in the darkness and thick air, lie two skeletons, which can never be found till the vessel is broken up. These are the remains of a smith and his It is reported that James Buchanan riveter, the latter being a lad. During the construction of the vessel, these two worked all through the week, keeping full time, and their work lay in between the skins. The smith was an elderly man, of a moody temper, who made no friends, and was not popular with his mates. No one had seen him leaving work; nobody was interested about him. But one payday both he and his lad failed to appear at the pay table to draw their money .-They never were Leard of more by any one who worked on the Great Eastern .-Of course their absence had been noticed by the time keeper and other officials; but the missing men being, as I have said, unpopular with their comrades, there had been very little inquiry about them until it was found that their money was not claimed. It was then soon noted that the last time they had been seen they were at work in the "case" of the ship, and before long it became a fixed notion that by a fall, or by the effect of some vapor, the two had been killed, or stunned until closed in; and all the host of men who worked at the great ship believed that somewhere in the vast hulk there lay two skeletons, which for some reason could never be found; the prosaic idea that the old fellow and his helper had left without warning for a better job, finding, of course,
