PIGS IN SUMMER.—From a late circular from John Haight, a well-known swine breeder, of Da Page county, we take the following:

Summer is the time to make pork; making it in winter is much like running a boat against wind and tide; it requires too much food to keep up the animal heat. If hogs have plenty of grass in summer, and about half the corn they will eat, they will fatten rapidly; and my belief is that three pounds of pork can be made from less grain in this way than one pound can be in cold weather with a hog in a close pen. The grass is cooling and loosening, and counteracts the feverish properties of corn. Hogs will never melt in summer, however fat, if they can have access to water and mud to lie in. Mud is very bad for hogs in cool or cold weather. It absorbs too much animal heat. Milk is a very cooling drink and almost indispensable to raising young pigs. But very little corn and no corn meal should be fed to young pigs before they are four months old. The effects of corn and raw corn meal on young pigs are these: The pigs will first be costive, then they will scour. They will begin to rub against everything they can rub against, that will rub their hair off. Their skin will have a red and dry appearance. A dry, black scurf will begin to form on them; and the more of the corn and meal they eat, the poorer they will get. The best thing that can be done for a pig in this condition, is to give him a thorough washing in warm rain water or sour milk; sour milk is best.—Coarse flour or middlings from rye or wheat, when made into a thin drinkable slop with milk, is the best feed for young pigs, except bread and milk. Bread is good for very young pigs, because it has been leavened. Food has to ferment before it will digest, and if fed to a young pig before fermented, it will overtask his stomach and spoil him. Lettuce is good for young pigs. It will stop the scours in them. The middlings should be put with the milk at night, after the feeding has been done, and allowed to be in the milk through the night, never allowing the will tub to get quite empty, always leaving a little in the bottom for yeast.—The swill should never be permitted to get stale. Slop feed should be fed often, and never more fed at a time than will be eaten up at once. Slop feed will make larger hogs than dry feed. After the pigs get to be from three to four months old, their food can be made stronger, but a pig will not bear much strong food until he begins to change from a pig into a hog, which will be known by his voice. In the West, where hogs are raised on a large scale, but one litter should be raised from a sow in a year, and the sow should have them in the month of May or June. The sows should run to grass, and may be fed on corn. The pigs should suck them as long as they will. In this way the pigs require but little care, and they get age so that they will winter well on corn. None but breeders should try to get more than one litter from a sow in a year. The fall litter will require too much care for the farmer. One litter can be got in April and another in September or October following, from one sow, but the spring pigs will have to be weaned from four to six weeks old, and fed on clear sour milk for two or three weeks after weaning, and fed often. New milk once a day will keep them from scouring.—Sour milk is better than new milk. New milk will first make the pig costive, then scour him. It will curdle in his stomach, but sour milk will not. The late fall pigs should suck the sow as they will, and the sows should be fed on warm slop feed, and fed often. The slop can be warmed by pouring hot water into the swill tub. A breeding sow should never be fed much dry corn.

PRESERVING GREEN CORN FOR WINTER.—The canning of corn in families so generally fails that we cannot recommend the trial. The next best thing to canning corn is that which is properly dried. The first essential is good corn, and the next is to dry it carefully before it gets too old. Mrs. M. L. Gage, of Ross county, Ohio, communicates the following sensible ideas about preparing it: "It is a wonder that so few should have any thing but field corn for table use; and for drying there is a still greater contrast between the common field corn and the garden varieties. I have been used for years to drying corn. Boil the green ears a minute or two, just to harden the milk, then cut from the cob and spread on a cloth in the sun for two days, taking it in at night; it will then keep anywhere.—When cooked, it is better to soak it a few hours, and boil in the same water. In cold weather all that is wanted for a week or two may be wet. It cooks quicker and tastes better. A little milk and flour boiled in is almost as good as cream. I have not given up drying corn, but for two years past I have put some down in salt, which gives another variety, and is more quickly prepared. At first I had difficulty in freshening it, and then it was comparatively tasteless, but now I boil the corn in one water a minute or two, turn the water off, add a few sliced potatoes, boil until they are done, drain off the water, and add cream or butter. We think this preparation tastes more like summer corn than the dried corn does. In salting, I put the green corn without boiling, and pack it, alternating one pint of corn and a small handful of salt. When the vessel is about full put on a cover that will fit down to the corn, and place a small weight on it, as it must be kept under the brine which it makes from its own juice. I have, for the past two years, been canning green corn with tomatoes. I use about one-fourth part corn, cooking the two together. I have never heard of but one case where green corn canned by itself did not spoil, but corn and tomatoes canned together is a perfect success."
