

The Farmer's Department.

LAMING HORSES.—The horse is one of the most powerful, ambitious and sensible of domestic animals, and yet, in a certain sense, is far from being a hardy one. In this respect, the horse is not equal to the rough and tumble usage which the mule or even the ox can bear without exhibiting marked signs of the severe discipline to which they have been subjected.

As has been already intimated, the horse, in a certain sense, is a delicate animal, and if pounced upon in a passion while encumbered with harness, and possibly with a load too heavy for easy movement, the chances are that efforts to escape punishment will result in such an over-tension of the muscles as to produce permanent lameness.

Every one conversant with the rough and tumble work of the farm, the lumber forest, stone quarries, the docks and the like, will have encountered many difficulties in which teams and teamsters have their powers of endurance severely tried.

Both become excited and fractious, and whatever the fault, if fault there be, the horse is likely to receive pretty severe treatment if not permanent damage. Not a few horses are aimed under such circumstances, while others are injured by want of proper consideration on the part of those having them in charge—not from positive ill treatment, but by carelessness in placing the animals in such situations as to cause unwanted exertions to escape from an apprehended danger.

Rough, boorish men are not suited to the care of an animal having the spirit, tenderness and susceptibility of the horse, and if they were less frequently entrusted with the management of stable stock, there would be fewer limping and comparatively valueless horses in our public thoroughfares than there are at present. The greatest care, it is true, cannot prevent accidents to horses in all cases, but with proper attention the number of the falling ones would constitute the exception, and not the rule, as is now too often the case.

LIQUID MANURE.—We believe there is no system of enriching the land for small gardens, with a view to perfection of crops, so truly economical and so easily available as that of using liquid manure. We occasionally hear of a gardener, or an amateur grower of some special plant or crop, that has practiced enriching with liquids, but it is only occasionally; yet the result of every record is in its favor, and a searching inquiry into any extra production of fruit, flower, or plant almost invariably gives watering with liquid manure as the cause. There is in almost every family waste or liquids, which usually go into the sewer or drain, or possibly upon the road, where they are of no avail, but if saved, by being conducted to a tank, would enrich the entire garden spot of vegetables, small fruits, furnish stimulus to the rose and other flower borders, and keep the grass plat green and fresh even in the hottest and driest weather of midsummer. The use of a little plaster (gypsum) occasionally thrown in and around the tank, would always keep it sweet and clean. By the use and practice of liquid manuring, no delay need ever occur in planting time because of the manure not being on hand, or not being in a sufficiently rotted condition; but planting could proceed, and the application of manure be made at leisure.—The Horticulturist.
