Brint is a Southern poet-a rebellion. I wish to acknowledge the Southern Patriotic poet. He has written an liberality towards myself and towards the soldiers serving against the rebellion and to thank them for it." There is homely truth in what Gen. Grant says about public men refraining from the utterance of rashly formed opinions, as well as from the promulgation of harsh personal strictures. The bane of American politics is the disposition manifested by men of small abilities to talkto blather and bluster. The people are to blame who have so long tolerated the evil of a diarrhea of words. Let Gen. Grant's example be followed, and we will add to American politics a practical effect, which cannot fail to prove highly beneficial to public affairs.

The linen table cover seems to compete make an ominous clatter, in honor of so important an occasion of festivity. Soon all things are ready for the feast. It will be a better feast if appropriate gifts are unostentatiously made to those whose life is led amid daily want and constant struggling for food for bare sustenance, for fuel for warmth enough to overcome the worst blasts of winter, and for raiment only sufficient to be a jest with the angry elements. Readers, one and all, a merry Christmas
