

[Concluded from first page.] must be very guarded in what I said, lest said boy might slip in his remarks at un-called for places; in fact I turned my conversation to him. I told him he ought to go home with me, and see what nice chickens we had in the country. Unluckily I mentioned a yoke of calves my brother owned. The word calves ruined all. The little fellow looked up and said: "Sister got a dozen of 'em, but she don't wear 'em only when she goes up town o' windy days."

The Farmers' Department.

CUTTING GRASS LATE.—My practical knowledge is not only of long standing, but has been very extensive, and I am an entirely practical writer, and indulge in no theories; from 1835 to 1856 my experience was as great as it was possible for any man's to be; during the last fourteen years of that period I was steward for a nobleman who had three large landed estates, about 100 miles apart, besides several small ones containing about as many hundred acres as the larger ones did thousands. One-fourth at least of the whole of this landed property was in permanent grass, which had remained unbroken sward for scores of years, and some of it for hundreds of years; none of this grass land had deteriorated but most of it was much improved, so that having the farming of many hundreds of it, and the superintendence of thousands, rented to opulent tenants, I ought to know something of grass land; and here I might as well say that many of my remarks are meant to apply to old permanent grass land composed of natural varieties, and not so clover or timothy, which make naught but temporary grass, and will run out.

But I am not to be made to believe that it is good for the hay, when made from the clover, to be turning to seed, much more have some seed quite ripe at the expense of the stems and leaves; paw! who wants seed for cattle? Nor can any one convince me that the whole landed proprietors in England are fools, which they must be if the statement above will apply generally, for every lease in that country expresses that clover shall not be allowed to seed, excepting in small quantities, because of its exhausting effects. Since being in this country I fed hay cut when in bloom to working oxen, horses, and some hundreds of sheep; it so happened that a late spring, and being overstocked, rendered it necessary to buy, which we did of a neighbor who cut his hay late, and the consequence was the whole of the animals had to have extra meal and grain, and then the horses lost flesh, the oxen suffered worse, and the sheep sank shillings per head, and the ewes half starved their lambs. Common sense will tell any one that hay is hay, but straw is a different article, and pray what is any stumby substance which has matured seed, but straw.

BEES.—Chloroform is now extensively used in England, and without injurious results, to stupefy bees so as to remove the honey. For this purpose a table is set about ten feet from the hive and covered with a cloth. Some chloroform (about a quarter or a sixth of an ounce) is then poured into a shallow dish and covered with a wire gauze, to prevent the bees from falling into it. The hive is then removed from its stand and set over the chloroform. In about twenty minutes all the bees will have fallen down on the table in a state of stupefaction, not one remaining in the comb. After removing the comb, the hive and the bees are restored to their place, the latter soon recovering without suffering the slightest inconvenience.

SHADES IN PASTURES.—Certain trees, like elms, maples, basswoods or lindens, willows, etc., interfering with the growth of the grass or crops, their roots being near the surface. Hickories, oaks, pepperidge and beeches, set their roots deep, and grass grows well in their shade. Still we would not cut down the former class. Cows give milk better the more still and quiet they are, and cool shade contributes essentially to their comfort. Cattle will soon fill themselves if the pasture is good; then they want shade to chew their ends under, and do proportionately better for it.

SPRUCE UP.—If you get a moment to spare, spruce up; put that gate on its hinges; put a little paint on the picket fence you built last year; trim up about your door-yard—make it cosy and inviting. Don't say you can't find time to attend to these things. The fact is, you have no time to be slovenly. Your wife and children will be happier, your farm will sell for more money in the market and will be worth more to your home, if you devote an odd hour now and then to sprucing up.
