

aminations, library fund, and marks were far away.

And then the hop, with its bright faces, entrancing music, dreamy waltzes, and merry dances. The whirl of exercises of more or less interest, with all the other pleasures of the commencement, made it a week which flew but too rapidly for his inclination.

This is the popular man. A fellow free with his time, tobacco, and money, always ready for a game, if thereby he saw recluse a coming pleasure, though he knows that on the morrow he is sure of a "flunk." He rarely answers more questions than absolutely necessary to put him through. He has a deep and abiding adoration of the senoritas in whose company he is generally found when not in his room entertaining his neighbors. He is a fellow of exceptional conversational ability and kindly feelings for everybody, and makes light of his own troubles while helping others in theirs.
