WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1893.

Dedication of the New Building for Civil Mechanical and Mining Engineering—It was a Stormy Day, but nevertheless a Great Day for Industrial Education in Pennsylvania.

The arrival of Governor Pattison and suite at 11.30 a. m., Wednesday was announced by the governor's salute of guns. He came in a special train of two Pullmans, one containing a Harrisburg, and the other a Washington party. In the Governor's party were, John W. Noble, Secretary of Interior; Gen. F. A. Walker of Boston; Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, Willets; Adjutant General Greenland, Gen. Beaver, Gen. Hastings, Gen. Fisher, Hons. J. E. Reyburn, W. Stone, G. T. Kribbs, I. J. Covington, J. C. Kerr, A. W. Harris, Thos. B. Cochran, A. B. Farquhar, State Senators Meek and Lloyd, Rev. J. P. McCaskey; members of the Legislature Schofield, McCormick, Zeigler, and some twenty others.

These parties stepped from the cars into the west entrance of the new building, where they were received by the President of the college and a committee from the faculty. The party then inspected the building and left it by the main entrance. When the Governor appeared a flourish of trumpets was sounded and the cadet battalion, which had been drawn up opposite to the entrance, came to "present arms." After saluting the colors the Governor, with the other guests, was escorted to the main building where the battalion was dismissed. At 1.30 p. m., the procession of guests, about four hundred strong moved to the armory where a collation was served. The armory interior presented a gay sight. From the girders, which supported the roof, hung numerous festoons of red, white and blue bunting, while the proscenium arch and gallery were almost hidden by the nation's colors. Upon the sides of the room the college colors formed a prominent part of the decoration. At the left of the hall was the speakers' table, in front of which sat the press representatives. Near the middle of the hall stood the legislative table, and on the right and left respectively those of the faculty and alumni. Friends of the college and the senior class occupied the eight remaining tables which formed a semi-circle around the speakers' table. During the dinner Stopper & Fisk's orchestra furnished music. After the collation was served several short after dinner speeches were listened to. Gen. Beaver, as chairman called upon Gov. Pattison, who spoke of the remarkable growth of the college. Congressman Ammerman, a member of the congressional delegation from Washington, spoke briefly. Professor Willets, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture of United States, dwelt upon the importance of young men learning a trade.

From the armory the guests repaired to the chapel where the formal opening exercises were held. Dr. Atherton who presided, opened with a brief address of welcome. He was followed by Gen. James A. Beaver, who as chairman
