

student who gives his aid to the bureau, we have every reason to believe, will probably be favored by it at an early date.

By an impression by sonomatic telephaphetic means we have gleaned the following from a day dreamer.

Time 1957, the last living graduate of the State College of Pennsylvania, 1897, is about to cross the river to that Greater University, he looks back upon his first year at College. What is the change?

It is not now called the State College of Pennsylvania but the Great State University of Pennsylvania. He sees no longer the chasm between faculty and student body but where the chasm once was, a nice brick court-room has been built wherein justice is dealt out by faculty and students, hand in hand, all for the best.

He sees here now not the mere technical school for which only few men are fitted, but a broad, liberal institution where every individual of the State may receive his or her intellectual training. An institution where the street gamin of our largest cities may be disciplined and fitted for any occupation in life; where any scholar may receive any amount of training in any amount of things and receive a certificate of that amount of training in that amount of studies; where the gray-haired philosopher may come and stay and dig treasures for sciences; and where the foreign immigrant may be civilized and made a true American qualified to exercise that great sacred right, as a true, loyal citizen.

A great change indeed, and who would not be willing to cross the river to a Greater University.

The trustee of Dartmouth College have formally accepted the designs of a New York architect for buildings to be erected on the proposed quadrangle plan on the campus. Within three years the quadrangle will be complete with over $1,000,000 worth of buildings and will be the finest of its kind in the country.

OBITUARY.

SOPHISTO M. ENCINOS.

It is our sad duty to announce, in this issue, the sudden demise from amidst the laboratory vapors of a busy, fruitful and interesting career, of the above well known gentleman. He was one of the main supports of this growing institution and should have been better fostered.

But whereas the allwise and self providing Providence saw fit to cut him down thus; in the prime of life, just as he was about to accomplish his end after previous hard labor and great expense. We can only sigh and quote, 'the good are often called first.'
