STATE, 0; CORNELL, 0.

State preserved her wonderful record in the game with Cornell at Ithaca, N. Y., on October 5th. The score 0 to 0 on Cornell's home grounds was a practical victory for our team. The sporting editors of the Philadelphia papers, with their usual weak explanations (flagrantly weak this time), have again attempted to belittle the playing of our football team. This time they claim that one official in four and seventeen players practically bulldozed three other officials and a crowd of thousands, not counting seventy odd Cornell football players, in uniform, out of a game of football on their own grounds.

The facts of the case are these: State started out with a rush of 20 yards gain, and the Cornell officials saw that their team must be protected from defeat; they managed to give the Cornell team the ball. In order to keep the game in State's territory Cornell resorted to punting as often as they secured the ball. State's backs called for a free catch each time, but were pulled down by Cornell's players.

Hoskins did the only thing an umpire could do according to the rules of the game. He awarded State the number of yards specified in the rules. Cornell's officials could not object to a decision so obviously fair. One of State's "subs" heard Cornell's coach instruct the referee to give the ball to Cornell each time it approached their 15-yard line, and this was done every time State advanced the ball to this line.

The second half was played almost entirely in Cornell's territory, but as often as State advanced the ball to Cornell's 15-yard line a foul was called and Cornell was given the ball, upon which it was immediately kicked down the field, State's backs being thrown each time they called for a free catch. Cornell's captain assured Captain McCaskey immediately after the game that he was satisfied with the game and the decisions rendered.

State's team put up a fine game without exception. Cornell's line was repeatedly opened at all points, and gains made of five, ten and fifteen yards. Captain McCaskey displayed his usual fine judgment in directing State's play. The team lined up as follows:
