

where they will spend the greater part of the winter in playing in the larger cities of Great Britain and the Continent.

The company contains some of the best known of the artists in the musical world. Mr. Wilczek, an Austrian by birth, showed such marked musical abilities at the age of fourteen, that the Austrian government sent him to Berlin, where, at their expense, he received instruction for three years under the greatest masters then living. He played at the first social function given at the White House by President and Mrs. McKinley, from whom he received profuse congratulations. Mrs. Renck-Wilczek is no less a true artist than is her husband. She received her musical education at Cologne and Berlin. Miss Cowen, soprano, Miss Hawkes, contralto, and Miss Burley, pianist, are among the best in their respective lines now in the field of concert performers, all of whom have established reputations both for themselves and for the company with which they are connected.

THE bulletin board at the Business Office is the most prominent feature of the main hall. It is also quite interesting, in its way, and to read it is a mild form of amusement popular with some people; but to the students it is a newspaper—the Daily Intelligencer, coming out in several editions,—and they take it with their breakfast, dinner, and supper, and glance at it between classes and after.

To a busy student, however, there is one very apparent difference between it and a newspaper. It lacks order of arrangement. One never knows where to look for the "ads" or rather where not to look for them. The notices on the bulletin board are not read out of curiosity, but rather out of habit—habit born of necessity. We are held responsible for any notices posted and to fail to read them does not exempt one from the consequences. To wade through half a dozen to twenty advertisements for various shoe shops, clothing houses, stick pins, fountain pens and this and that, not to mention dealers in second hand articles, and,
