devoted her best efforts to the uplifting and development of our beloved institution. While we did not have the influence of her personality and services in the class room, we are doubly conscious of her worth and strengh, in other ways. It is sometimes said that if you want to seek the cause of the greatness of a distinguished man, you must go back to his wife or mother. So we may say to the work of Miss Mc-Elwain. Our president and other members of the faculty have labored hard for the upbuilding of the College, and their efforts are plainly seen. But with her, it is not so evident, although just as beneficial. Her work as secretary of the faculty brought her in close touch with the administrative function, and it is here that her work has shown itself to be of so much account. She has kept her department in a systematic and prosperous condition and we can truthfully say that no one knows the condition and wants of the student body better than she. The position she has held involved many duties and a great deal of strain, but we are glad to say that she has discharged them faithfully, and in leaving here she leaves a body of young men who keenly feel her loss. The Lance, in behalf the student body, extends a farewell hand, and wishes her happiness in the new life upon which she enters.
