EXCHANGES.

With but few exceptions, the college literature for November which has come to our hands is of a very pleasing standard. Owing to the season, the athletic departments are naturally teeming over with good football stories, with victories, defeats, and gridiron hero-making galore. As a general rule the women's college lists are unfortunately deprived of this great topic of athletics, but the quality and quantity of their literature, verse and editorials help fill the gap in an admirable manner.

One of last month's exchanges gave the FREE LANCE a very just criticism on its lack of literature and the quality of that which it contained. We wish to state that that department has ever been our weakest point and no doubt shall continue so as long as our institution remains so highly technical in its nature.

The Hamilton Literary Magazine contains a short story entitled "The Rescue," whose point is rather hard to make out. If it was meant for humor it is a very poor specimen and if not it is more so.

The Maryland Collegian contains an especially good list of editorials, and the same commendation may be applied to November's Brunonian, without excepting a single department.
