

that the popularity of the magazine would be increased and be a means of keeping a better record of the athletic feats of the College. But while an attempt was made to give our best services in the interests of the magazine, we are conscious of our own weakness and of the errors that may have been committed. And, since no claim is made that we have reached the standard that is desirable, we feel sure that with our prospective successors the popularity and value of the LANCE will be further increased.
