

wire, which caused him to lose his balance and topple over on an uninsulated wire carrying a current at 2,300 volts pressure. He was kept alive for some hours by artificial respiration, but eventually the end came.

Mr. Holloway was a very popular and much esteemed young man, and his quiet yet attractive ways as well as his ability in his line of work had made for him a long list of friends and hosts of admiring acquaintances. Never before in the history of the college has a graduate been called to his final rest so soon after leaving his classmates. Just ready for an aggressive successful life, with everything before him, his death brings great sorrow to all his friends and relatives.
