

and not a cent more. The trustees have made it a rule to apply every cent to a useful purpose, and in doing so have kept a separate account for each appropriation received, so that every cent can be accounted for.

Mr. Stulb, acting chairman of the committee, next spoke. He expressed the thanks of the committee for the hospitality shown, and said they all appreciated their kind reception very much. This body of men represented the working committee on appropriation. He cited the large amounts which had been given to education, charities, etc., to show that the State had been liberal with its money. They appreciated the noble work that was being done at State College, and assured the students that the committee would do all that it properly could, and only hoped that the House would accept their recommendations.

Mr. Colville, of Philadelphia, was the next speaker. He said that the President had tried to impress upon them the work being done here. There was no need for that. The representatives from Centre county had been doing that all along. He said he had been here two years ago and was so impressed that he came back this year again. He would go back to Harrisburg with the same feeling that he did before. It is not so much what the committee wanted to do, he said, but what they could with the means at their command.

Mr. Hewes, a representative of the press, was called on by President Atherton. He praised the Senators and Representatives from this county and said they were the ones who were responsible for getting all these men up here. He also said that the men on the appropriation committee were all known to be upright and generous, and he was sure they would do all in their power for the college.

Senator Patton was called on but begged to be excused. He said that he wanted to give the committee a chance to speak and he himself would be glad to come back some other time and speak to the students.

General Beaver also said a few words to impress the importance of the need of the money.
