

iversity gossip was that the game would be an easy one, and few students came out to see it played; but "easy" was used in connection with the wrong nine. The game ended with a score of 8 to 1 in favor of the visitors. At the end of the fourth State had scored five runs, and the Tigers were completely lost as to McIlveen's curves. A goose egg was saved for the Tigers in the seventh inning by Purnell's hit, and his scoring on another by Wells and an error by Mason. Second base had not been touched by any player until the fourth inning, when State scored five runs. During the eighth the Tigers had the bases filled, and their spirits seemed to brighten, but only to return to the former state without scoring. The victory was largely due to McIlveen's splendid pitching, but every man was on the alert, giving him the support which enlivened the whole team in spite of the cold and snow. Toward the end of the game, Dewitt, of Princeton fame, appeared with a few half-hearted, half-frozen rooters to cheer up their team, but it seemed to do as much for State's nine, and they played steadier than before, closing the game by catching the last two men at home plate.
