The New Drill Manual.

The new Manual of Drill Regulations recently adopted by the War Department is causing a little trouble for both officers and men, owing to the many changes made. The Manual of Arms is practically the same as in the old regulations, changing only the movement from Port to Rt. Shoulder from a two count to a three count movement.

The most striking change is in the formation of the Company. Under the new regulations the rear rank "fall in" at a distance of 40 inches and that interval is maintained always when marching in company front. The old "fours" are done away with, both as a unit of the company and in the wording of commands, and "squads" are substituted. There is a marked tendency to treat the squad, as a unit, just as they treat the company, as a unit; and thus, "squads right" and "squads right turn," the movements which have replaced "fours right" and "right turn" are executed in exactly the same manner as "Company right," and "Company right turn". It is impossible to say now how these changes will be accepted but some, at least, are very practical and will make drill much simpler.
