Farmers vs. Engineers.

The much anticipated baseball game between the instructors of the Mechanical and the Agricultural departments was played on Beaver Field last Saturday afternoon before a large and thoroughly appreciative crowd. Until the sixth inning the farmers held the lead; by that time, however, the mechanicals had succeeded in deriving the equation of Mr. Clarke's curves, and the immediate result was seven runs in that one inning. The disciples of "Billy" Frear never succeeded in overcoming this handicap, and the game ended with the mechanicals one run to the good.

The work of Prof. Harding at first base was certainly gilt edged; indeed it can be said with safety that the performances of most of the players were streaked with golden. In the eighth inning one of the farmer lads ran up against a "new game" in the shape of Mr. Sanders' head, and was carried from the diamond considerably the worse for wear. However, he recovered his breath in time to play out the last inning. Among the agriculturalists, special mention must be made of the good work of Mr. Kline, the gentlemen whose hair looked as if he might have lost a bet on Bryan. Joe Shed also played a good game. Following is the line up and the score by innings:
