

Picture Scrap.

On Friday morning the Freshmen attempted to have their class-picture taken. The signal was the striking of the half-hour on the tower clock during the second period. The Freshmen turned out promptly and gathered in front of the Auditorium, but several Sophomores were on hand and Hickman, '08, put the camera out of business by pulling the bellows away from the interior mechanism.

And then the fun began, for it was a warm moist day and the snow was in fine "packing" condition. Immediately both classes started snow-balling each other and the air was soon filled with flying missiles. First the Sophomores, and then the Freshmen charged, each in turn being on the defensive, and the fight grew hotter and hotter, and hands grew colder and colder. In the lulls between charges the warriors stuffed their hands in their pockets for warmth. There was no perceptible application of the military tactics learned during fall drill. There was, however, much individual valor shown by a number of men of each class.

After about half an hour's fighting, hostilities ceased by mutual consent. There were numerous black eyes visible for several days after, and lame arms galore. Considered as the Picture Scrap alone, it was a clear victory for the sophomores.
