An Easter Episode.

The Track House was the scene of a unique and interesting contest last Sunday morning. "Scotty" having offered as a prize to the man who could eat the greatest number of soft-boiled eggs, a handsome cotton chicken, the competition was close and earnest. Many of the contestants established high batting averages, but none could successfully compete with Mr. Staud. Mr. Staud had downed twenty embryo chicks before he unfortunately "fowled" out. He was completely fooled by an in-shoot; said he thought sure it was an out-drop. Pinfeathers are already in evidence upon Mr. Staud's smiling visage, and he is evidently ashamed to look ahen in the face. His room-mate, Mr. Gotwals, claims that Mr. Staud aroused him (aforementioned Gotwals) from his sleep at four o'clock on Monday morning, by flapping his (Staud's) arms and crowing. There are some who are inclined to be skeptical over Mr. Gotwals statements. Mr. Gotwals also ate eggs.

Mr. Thompson was looked upon as one of the most likely competitors, but he resigned early in the fight. Said he knew he was chicken-hearted, but he hated the thought of being such a cemetery for young and innocent chickens.

Mr. Henry also disappointed his supporters, his name proving a serious handicap.

It is understood that Messrs Henshaw and Cohen intend to challenge for the championship. Mr. Staud says he will not defend his title. His diet now consists of chicken-netting. It was regarded by experts as necessary in avoiding egotistic tendencies.
