

Harvard University has just announced a change in its entrance policy. The faculty has decided that candidates for admission will be permitted to enter by passing successfully the examinations of the examining board, of which most of the large colleges are members. Harvard is the last of the colleges of the country to accept these examinations as satisfying her standard, and does so only with the condition that the examination books of all applicants are to be read by representatives.

The following clipping from the "University Empire" fits well the conditions prevailing at State.

I've got a pair of corduroys,
And I am in the swim!
Just one kid aint got none at all;
Gee whiz! I pity him.

He can't have any fun these days,
He's worse off than a Prep.
He never understands the joys
My trousers bring, each step.

They rub and squeak and talk to me -
They are my dearest friends.
They give me lots of room to grow,
And peace my walk attends.

I wouldn't swap my corduroys
For any kind of pants.
I'll wear them days and nights and years,
And then give you a chance.
