EDITORIAL.

There are at State a number of county clubs which must necessarily have some reason for existence. To have their pictures in the LaVie was a reason formerly attributed to these organizations, but their recent activities in the interest of the college give rise to a firm belief that they are worth something more. Although acting in a social way, they no doubt were influential last Christmas in turning the thoughts of many young men State-ward. Such active work in putting the advantages of this institution before Pennsylvanians is worthy of commendation, and there is no doubt but that their previous reputation has been lost sight of in the usefulness which now characterizes them.

As representatives of various counties in this commonwealth they are interested in promoting State's interests in those counties. What better way is there just now than to interest their representatives at Harrisburg in this college and in its needs? Indeed, organized effort is far more effective and useful than individual effort, and there is no doubt but that letters from such organized clubs would have considerable influence with the representatives of their respective counties. This is worth considering; if it is taken up, it can result in nothing but good for State.

Will the secretaries of the various organizations about college, including the county clubs, please drop in 323 Main the names of their officers and the college address of each?

Professor Reber has announced plans for what will undoubtedly be the finest engineering school in this country. The extensive reputation which State has acquired has brought to her portals from Pennsylvania and other states and even from our island possessions so many young men that she now finds herself unable to give them proper instruction on account of limited facilities.

The new building, as planned, has been contemplated for some time, but the immediate and growing needs of the engineering department have made it necessary to ask for additions at once. Although only so much is being asked for this year as will meet the present absolute needs, yet the outlook for the future indicates plainly that in a very few years even this enlarged structure will prove inadequate. State's growth has been very rapid in every department of late, and the building-up begun by our late executive must necessarily be continued if she is to meet the demands which are now being made.
