

(2). It can be said with perfect sincerity that the work of the Association in all of its departments is now so firmly established that the days of organization are past and the days of perfecting and of growth are present.

(3). The matter of rooms has already been dealt with, and it can only be added that until suitable quarters are provided, the growth of the Association will be laborious and comparatively slow, instead of steady and irresistible as it should be. "State" is growing; the Christian Association cannot afford to stand still.

ALUMNI.
