EDITORIAL.

Instead of the regular issues for next week and the week following, the two will be combined and a special Commencement number will appear on the Saturday preceding Commencement. We expect to have excellent cuts of all the athletic teams, with an interesting summary of the year's work. The final issue will be by far the best of the year.

"O class spirit thou art a jewel." If the attendance at the Freshman-Sophomore debate last Saturday evening is an indication of the spirit existing in the two lower classes, then class loyalty is a jewel indeed. For weeks the eight men who had been chosen to represent the classes had worked hard and faithfully.

When the presiding officer called the house to order, fifty Sophomores, or in round numbers one-third of the class, were present; the Freshmen numbered about one hundred, or considerably less than half of the class.

The moral is obvious. We cannot afford to weaken our class spirit and our college spirit by failing to support the men who represent us in inter-class contests. True college loyalty cannot exist without class loyalty, and the men who stayed at home to "grind" or to "loaf" last Saturday evening made a serious mistake. Think it over.

A pleasing sign of the new order of things is the closer relationship between faculty and students as indicated by the fact that there has been this year more social contact between these two parts of our college community than ever before. Numerous entertainments have been tendered to various parts of the student body by individuals or groups of faculty members, chief of which has been the Cotillion Club reception to the Senior class. All of these affairs have been greatly appreciated and have done much toward bringing about that mutual understanding and co-operation which should characterize every institution of higher learning.

The first serious attempt to solve one of the most important questions before the student body was taken by the adoption of an honor system by the Senior and Junior Electricals. In the discussion of this question which took place in these columns earlier in the year a marked difference of opinion was manifested as to the desirability of adopting such a system, although it seems to be generally agreed that some change from the present method was needed. The system as adopted is a strong one and its working will be watched with great interest by both friends and foes of the honor system. Whatever may be the outcome, the faculty and students of the Electrical department are to be commended for their efforts to solve a problem of importance to the entire institution.

The Lafayette Meet.

Saturday's meet with Lafayette on Beaver field proved to be quite interesting. In spite of the cold weather and rain, a large crowd saw State win by the score of 56 to 48. The track was in fine shape and several exciting finishes were made, but it was too cold for very fast time. Ogilvie and Hirshman were two new men to win their "S," while Lee and Chalmers broke their own records in the high jump and
