The Campus Rush.

After the freshman class meeting on Saturday afternoon the class marched in a body out of the Main building and immediately "trespassed" on the front campus. The sophomores, who had been anticipating such a move as this, were there in large numbers and the annual campus rush was commenced at once.

In the first rush the Freshmen had a close formation which the "sophs" could not break up and in a short time 1911 had crossed the campus to College avenue. Not satisfied with this victory, the entire class returned by way of the avenue to the Main building and then started across the campus again. This time the freshmen did not bunch as closely as before and the result was some hard individual scrapping. Finally, with a much greater effort the class worked its way a second time across the campus and announced their victory with many lusty cheers.

A freshman who desired to mark his laundry as a matter of identity, is said to have inscribed his name on one piece and to have marked the others ditto.
