

Natural History Club.

The Natural History club has begun what promises to be the greatest and most successful year of its existence. Up to the present time the majority of the members of this organization have come from the Schools of Agriculture and Natural Science. We feel sure that there are a great many men at State who have either already given some time or consideration to one or more branches of Nature Study or who, though they have never given such consideration, are interested in Nature. All men possess this inborn interest to a greater or less extent and all that is necessary is to develop it. Do you think that the Natural History club might be able to cause this spirit to grow in you? As a means toward this end, we have changed for the present the program followed at the meetings of the club by introducing Bird Study.

The subject of Bird Study is without doubt one of the most interesting phases of Natural History work. At present the Natural History club is using the following plan for presenting the work: drawings are made showing the characteristics of each group of birds; specimens are shown to impress these characteristics upon the mind and to get the members of the club familiar with our most common birds; a brief review is made of the economic value of each species and a short time is devoted to discussion.

The club holds a meeting every Wednesday evening in Room 206 Main Building at 8:00 o'clock. Many colleges and universities have Natural History organizations which have become leaders in scientific work. We feel that State ought to have and must have a Natural History club of "State standard." May we not look for you at our next meeting to help bring about this condition?

The Forestry Club.

A Forestry club has recently been organized among the students of the department. The organization of this club makes it possible for every student in college to join in the discussion of our national and individual welfare as related to the subject of forestry. The regular meetings are held every Tuesday evening at 6.30 o'clock in the Forestry building. Everyone is invited to come and join in the discussions, the subjects of which will be posted on the bulletin board from time to time.
