Prof. Paul's talk was especially interesting. He advised mechanical engineers to stay in the east, but stated that the west offered great opportunities to electricals and especially to civils, because of the field which is being opened by irrigation.

The Three Commodities.

The truths contained in the following sentences, written by a successful New York business man, are so vital that they are worthy of careful reading and thought.

"In studying the life of man we discover a threefold division in his development, the physical or the body, the intellectual or the brain, and moral or character, that ever have been, are, and ever will be on the market of the world.

"The physical or brawny man without character is low and drags the market. The intellectual or brainy man without character is diminished in value and unprofitable in the end. The moral or "character" man without either brawn or grain is stamped a saint, and heaven is his home,—he has no place among the sons of men. But the physical or brawny man with character is rated high and is in great demand. The intellectual or brainy man with character is higher still, as the demand is greater. The moral or "character" man with both brawn and brain is the masterpiece of heaven, the beauty of the world, the paragon of animals, and the noblest work of God!"

Harrisburg Thesis Trip.

About twenty senior and junior mechanicals and electricals will go to Harrisburg today to make complete tests on the steam and power plant of the new capitol building. A week's work will be required to complete the tests. A second trip will be made later in the year, after the new ventilating system has been installed, and comparative tests of the new and the old systems will be made.
