

the University force. Study centers will be established, and night schools opened in conjunction with lectures and correspondence, and all instructors engaged in this branch of the work will be fully acquainted with the methods and requirements of the University.

The United States has not kept pace with England and Germany in the establishment of schools which offer an opportunity for further education and training to people who are at work. It is believed that Wisconsin is taking a step in educational progress which will be followed sooner or later by every state institution in the country.
