

A New Course Proposed.

Professor Diemer, in a paper read before the Mechanical Engineering society at its last meeting made a suggestion as to the establishment of what would constitute a new departure in education. He spoke of the need of men qualified to solve the problem of cheaper production of commercial products and pointed out the lack of any suitable course of study for the training of the "production engineer." Neither the accountant nor the engineer of the present day has an education broad enough to enable him to deal with the problem in all its phases. What is needed is a course of study which shall combine both technical and business branches and Prof. Diemer has mapped out a tentative course along these lines.

Senior Class Meeting.

At a largely attended meeting of the senior class held last Thursday evening, several matters of general interest were discussed. The proposal of the committee in regard to the establishment of a class fund met with unfavorable consideration. The class will undoubtedly establish a fund, but it has not yet decided to what extent and in what manner. The committee in charge will make a further report.
