from foreign countries was visited at Perth Amboy, N. J. This plant is owned by the Guggenheim's of New York. In Gloucester City, N. J., the party saw the manufacture of the Welsbach incandescent mantles from start to finish. Here the party met with a very cordial reception, and, at the noon hour, were given what the fellows considered a banquet. The A. G. I. Gas Works at Pt. Breeze, Philadelphia and the Whitall Tatum company at Millville, N. J. were also visited. At the latter place they were given a banquet in the club house provided for employees.

The party now went to Frankford, Pennsylvania, where they saw the manufacture and purification of all kinds of coal tar products in the plant of the Barret Manufacturing company. This is the largest establishment in the world which makes the common camphor balls. Baugh's Fertilizer works at Philadelphia were also inspected.

One of the most interesting features of the trip was the visit through the chemical laboratories of Columbia University, where the party received a most cordial reception.

To climax the whole, Dr. Pond, who met the party in Philadelphia, according to his usual custom, tendered them with a luncheon at the Hotel Hanover, Philadelphia, where they had their headquarters. After this they disbanded, having had a most profitable and enjoyable trip, said to be one of the most successful ever taken.
