

(Miss Harman), a senior at State College, determine to solve it in their own way. They conjure up a purely imaginary young man, call him "Jack Williams" by chance, and the complications which follow keep everybody in a very busy state for a while. The visit to State and the deceptions of the schemers afford much amusement, and the discovery of the girls in Gladys' room, purposefully gotten up to represent a man's room, by the ever pursuing Madam Bogusky and Mrs. Montessor caps the climax. The French maid, who had gotten into the game on her own account shows up very opportunely with a letter to Mrs. Montessor from the real "Jack Williams" asking for her permission to address her niece, and presenting unimpeachable credentials. The formerly obdurate aunt relents and the man in the case finally comes into his own.
