

OUR LIBRARY

Dr. Runkle Has Compiled a Very Useful Handbook of Information for the Students.

Dr. Erwin W. Runkle, librarian of the Carnegie Library, has compiled a handbook on the arrangement and use of the library which is a valuable source of information to every person connected with the college. Similar books are issued by the Libraries of Illinois, Purdue and West Virginia universities and have proved their worth at each place. Many of the students here are not aware of the fact that the handbook is at the library for free distribution. They should obtain a copy and get acquainted with the workings and contents of our magnificent library.

Our library including departmental libraries contains upwards of 38,000 volumes and has an annual growth of about 2500 bound volumes and 3000 pamphlets. From the first year of our library in 1857 the books have been selected with a view of meeting the needs of instruction in the work offered at the College, making it, consequently, strongest in scientific and technical lines. During the past three years, however the subjects of economics, constitutional history and law have been greatly augmented through the gift by the class of 1907, of the private library of our late President Atherton. The gifts of General Beaver in Pennsylvania history, and the recent accessions in language, literature, history, fiction, art, etc., have added to the facilities of the library in these fields. Department libraries or technical reading rooms are maintained, also, by the following schools and departments:

School of Agriculture and Experiment Station.

Institute of Animal Nutrition.

Chemistry.

Biology.

Botany.

Physics.
School of Mines and Mining.
School of Engineering.
The library is also a depository for the bound set of the United States Public Documents. All current Congressional and Departmental publications are received, indexes to all being kept up to date. A liberal supply of daily and Sunday newspapers are always on file as well as the Current Events Index issued by the Wisconsin Free Library Commission. This can be used as an index to the Daily Press.

Dr. Runkle offers the following suggestions to students on the use of the library, which if lived up to will broaden the scope of the average student's education to a degree not at first realized by many.

1. Form the habit of library reading at a regular time each day or week. In addition to daily papers, read the current comment of such weeklies as the Outlook, Nation, Literary Digest, Independent and London Times.

You probably have social engagements every few weeks or months when dress clothes are needed, if not required—evening parties, dinners, dances, theater, all sorts of places when "the proper thing" in clothes is highly important.

You ought to have the clothes for such occasions, if you haven't them already. And we'll show you dress clothes here, ready to wear, that can't be matched by any made to measure man; the finest falnes all silk lined; the latest and best style; the most perfect tailoring; we guarantee correct fit.

Full dress suits $32.50 to $60. Tuxedos $30 to $50. We'll provide all the other things you need: white waistcoats for full dress, gray or fancy for tuxedo, gray or black hose, gray or white gloves and neckwear; shirts, hats, etc. There's "the proper thing" in these, too.
