istence to the people of the commonwealth, it is entirely proper and right that it should in turn use its equipment of both technical experts and laboratories in a manner consistent with the rendering of the greatest possible amount of service to the largest number of people. To do this, it is the plan to aid in the establishment of special schools, which are to be run in harmony with the public school system, and under direction of the State Department of Education, in the various industrial centers throughout the state. The technical experts of the college faculty will be prepared to aid in the supervision of these schools. Such schools will include in their course of study such subjects as the people may demand in the way of academic and technical education.

"Where it is not feasible to establish a permanent school, individual instruction will be offered by means of correspondence courses supplemented by personal teaching from time to time by various members of the instruction staff of the college.

"Agricultural instruction of a similar nature has been carried on by the college for some time, but the first step in putting into operation the above outlined scheme for reaching other "industrial classes" has been taken in Williamsport. A school for giving instruction in mechanical drawing, strength of materials, elementary mechanics and machine design, under the personal supervision of Prof. J. B. Whitmore, of The Pennsylvania State College, has been opened, under the auspices of the public school system. If it should prove useful, it is hoped that arrangements can be made whereby Supt. Charles Lose and the Williamsport school board may be enabled, with such aid as the college can rightly give, not only to continue the work, but to enlarge it along many vocational and special educational lines."
