

Prof. J. N. G. Nesbit, '00, Dean of the Night School of the Georgia School of Technology.

Professor Joseph N. G. Nesbit, who graduated from this institution in 1900 in Electrical Engineering, and who was formerly Professor of Experimental Engineering at the Georgia School of Technology located at Atlanta, Ga., has within the last year or so been made dean of the night school at the same institution. This night school is just in its infancy, having been in operation less than two years, and although it is not as widely known as it might be, yet over a hundred of Atlanta's young men are taking advantage of its establishment. The school offers the following courses: English, mathematics, carpentry, pattern making, textile engineering, chemistry, foundry, machine and wood shop work, forging, pipe and steam fitting, elementary mechanical engineering, electrical engineering, civil engineering, physics, architectural drawing, etc. The school year is divided into three terms of twelve weeks each. Four nights a week, two hours a night, are given up to the work. The full course is three years, but any man who is industrious or desirous of learning more, may stay indefinitely.

In commenting upon the school and the results already obtained Prof. Nesbit says. —

We make a specialty of turning out specialists with the most scientific training obtainable. When a young man is given our diploma he is qualified with the assurance of perfect knowledge to accept and hold any position in technical or textile lines.

Sophomores Take Soils Trip.

Last week the Sophomores in the School of Agriculture took an automobile trip up Nittany Valley and down Penn Valley for the purpose of studying the types of soil existing in that section of the country.

BELLEFONTE

On account of the lack of accommodations for all, the class had to be taken in two sections, one section taking the trip on Wednesday and the other on Thursday. The start each day was made at the Cop corner, the journey continuing to Lemont and thence to Pleasant Gap. From here the men walked over Nittany Mt. and met the automobiles near Center Hall from where the journey continued to Penn's Cave. All along the route the various types of soil were studied and the conditions of the land observed. At the cave, after devouring the meal which satisfied the appetites aroused by the six mile walk over the mountains, the men explored the wonders of Penn's Cave.

From the cave the return trip was made down Penn's Valley through
