

How Dartmouth College Protects the Health of Her Students.

Dartmouth College, under the direction of Dr. H. N. Kingsford, is using very efficient protective measures for the prevention of disease among her students. So far as possible each room is given an hour's rest between exercises and all rooms are expected to be clear of men on the hour and until seven minutes after the hour. The air of each class room is tested regularly and whenever the bacterial count is over sixty on a ten minute agar agar plate exposure the room is closed and fumigated. Dr. Kingsford collected sputa from a corner in a lavatory which was found to contain Tuberculosis bacilli. The students using that lavatory were examined and two of them were found to be victims of Tuberculosis. Both students had to leave college for the safety of the others. Similar examinations are frequently made. All boarding houses are inspected by the medical director and have to be kept in a sanitary condition. When a case of measles develops the patient puts on fumigated clothing and is taken at once to the isolation hospital. Clothing from the infected room is lowered, on the outside of the
