The college librarians have always had to contend with the problem of mutilation of library books and periodicals for personal use, and of late the practice has been of frequent occurrence. Magazines and reference books have been found with pictures and articles cut out bodily by thoughtless or narrow minded individuals.

The Penn State-Carnegie Library is a well equipped, well managed institution, founded in the interests of all Penn State men to such an extent that students are allowed almost absolute freedom in its use. Members of the faculty coming from other institutions have been amazed at the liberal policy pursued by Dr. Runkle in his regulations as to the reading room and stacks. It is difficult to understand how any one can by a selfish act deprive hundreds of men of something which they have a right to, and, in so doing, betray the absolute confidence in the student body expressed by the library policy.

A student has been accused of mutilating a periodical, and he will be brought before the student council for trial. A former student council resolution inflicts the following penalties. First offense, the replacing of things damaged, for second offense, absolute expulsion from college.

It will thus be seen that the offense is regarded as a serious one, and all men should not only refrain from breaking the rule, but should also see that no one else does without punishment. All college laws and customs are useless if everyone does not lift a hand to enforce them.

A warning should be sufficient.

It seems that the "re-College minder", published in a recent issue of the Collegian, concerning the necessity of full attendance at mass meetings, has not had a very far-reaching effect. Notwithstanding the extensive advertising of last Thursday's meeting, even to the publication of important matters to be considered and voted upon, it is doubtful if there were 150 men in the Old Chapel at the appointed time and later in the evening. Moreover at the recent athletic election there were an appalling number of men who failed in their duty of casting votes.

We wonder how many columns have been written in the past, eulogizing that famous Penn State spirit of ours, and we wonder what Penn State alumni will think when reading the astounding news of no quorum at two consecutive athletic association meetings. It is certain that there is something radically wrong—what it is, no one can say. At any rate, whatever has been the cause, a dangerous precedent has been set. The actual harm has been done; and the attitude for every man in college should be to remedy matters by attending the meeting which will be held in the near future, and all subsequent meetings.

A summary of business which was to have been brought up last last Thursday will be found in another column of the Collegian.

Let us make the success of the coming evangelistic campaign in February unprecedented in the history of the college. These admirable enterprises are conducted so as to reach the heart of every student, and to cause him to contemplate the deeper, spiritual sides of life.

The leaders engaged in making addresses to students all over the world, really belong to the highest type of manhood—they have realized the needs of the college man, and they are untiring in their unselfish efforts to satisfy these needs.

An appeal is hereby made to every individual student in the Pennsylvania State College to give his support to this wonderful campaign, not only by his faithful attendance at all the meetings, but also by his moral and spiritual aid. Addresses of such a calibre will be of indefinable benefit to every man in this institution, whether he be settled in his beliefs or not. For the sake of his own spiritual welfare a man cannot afford to miss a single meeting. It must be readily apparent to every man, the importance of cultivating the mind with higher and nobler ideals.

Let us individually and collectively stand behind this great campaign, which is instituted solely to influence the lives of Penn State men. Let us resolve to become acquainted with those spiritual essentials which make a man's life worth living.

Owing to the fact that The Next Wednesday occurs in the middle of examination week, and to the fervent desire of the Collegian staff to "stay in college", there will be no issue of the paper next week, and the next issue will appear on the first Wednesday in the new semester, February 4.

General Faculty Meeting

The general faculty held a short meeting last Thursday evening and two new committees were added to the present list of nine standing committees. Professor Kinsloe was appointed chairman of the new committee on Physical Activities which replaces the old committee on athletics. It will be their duty to look after the military drill and gymnasium drill as well as the various teams and members thereof. Professor Eddy was appointed chairman of the new committee on religious activities which will take care of chapel attendance and speakers, the cooperation of the churches in the village and students, thereby increasing their relation, and also Y. M. C. A. service and meetings.

A new ruling whereby students belonging to musical organizations be given the same number of hours absences a semester as the football team or other like athletic teams was acted upon and passed. This will put the glee clubs on the same basis as an athletic team.
