TELLS OF EUROPEAN WAR

in her refusal. Two days later Sir Edward Grey, British Foreign Minister, proposed that the whole controversy should be referred for decision to the ambassadors at London of Germany, Italy, France and Russia.

'On July 28 war was declared by Austria on Serbia, by August 1 eight nations were at war, on August 23 Japan entered the struggle and two months later Turkey came in, to be followed shortly after by Italy. Now Greece and Rumania are on the verge of war.

"The motives of the nations are as usual mixed but certain elements are clear. Serbia is defending her national existence and is showing her displeasure at the annexation in 1907 by Austria of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Austria is attempting to punish a government which she holds responsible for the murder of her Crown Prince and deems it necessary to defend herself against the Pan-Slavic movement either under the leadership of Serbia or some other of the Balkan states or Russia.

"Russia entered the struggle because of her century-old desire for an outlet on the Mediterranean through the Black Sea and because if she did not come to the aid of Serbia she would practically be giving up her leadership of the Slavs.

"France entered the war as the ally of Russia because of her fear of Germany and her desire to recover the lost provinces of Alsace and Lorraine. Belgium is protecting her national existence and defending her honor as an independent state.

"Germany is the buffer state of Western Europe and has always felt that because of her exposed condition she must maintain a tremendous army. She is an ambitious power who finds herself on the stage of action after all the desirable parts of the world are parcelled out among the other nations.

"Britain is at war in defense of the neutrality of Belgium, because of her entente with France and on account of the recent bitter hostility to the naval and commercial policies of Germany.

"Japan neglects no opportunity for gaining recognition of herself as a world power and a German colony on the Chinese coast was a standing menace to Japanese hegemony in the Far East. Turkey has been under German influence for a long time and fears that Constantinople will pass into Russian hands if the allies win.

"With such bitter racial antagonisms and commercial rivalries it must be understood that this is no short struggle but a battle to the death. Those who are in a position to understand the strength of the combatants estimate the length of the war from one to five years. The national ambitions and the whole future of at least Belgium, France, Germany and England are at stake."

The collection of pictures illustrating the lecture was designed to emphasize those men who made the war, who carry it on and who will make the peace, and to show those new engines of destruction which for the first time are being used in warfare. They included pictures of all of the leaders of the countries at war and the generals in the field. There were a number of pictures of Zeppelins and aeroplanes, of war vessels and ships, illustrations of the transport service, the Red Cross work, as well as life battle fields and in the trenches.

Mr. Bestor has made the modern European situation his special field. He has studied conditions at first hand in London, Paris, in Vienna and Rome, in Stockholm and The Hague, in Christiania and Copenhagen, in Brussels and Berlin. He has watched Emperor William review 60,000 troops at Templehof Field and been present at exhibition flights of the German aeronautic corps.

He has travelled through the parts of Belgium and France which are now the scene of the most terrible fighting in modern times. He has seen many of the monarchs and military leaders who are in the forefront of present day interest, has heard in the parliaments discussions by the great political leaders and has interviewed foreign correspondents, diplomats and parliamentarians.

Charles F. Ball, of Princeton, Pa., formerly president of Volant College, is registered in physics, agricultural education and poultry husbandry.

One hundred ninety-two men are registered this year, as against 161 last year. This represents about the normal increase of male enrollment.
