President Defends Students.

Defending the modern college student, Dr. E. E. Sparks, president of the Pennsylvania State College, in a recent address at the Central Y. M. C. A., in Philadelphia, said there never was a time when clean living prevailed as largely among college men as at present. In his opinion athletics have set a standard for taking care of the body; for demonstrating that the wages of sin is death.

Dr. Sparks said; "Never was there so much attention paid to the study of the Bible as at present. For nearly sixty years the college with which I am connected has required attendance at daily and Sunday religious services; has attempted to build the moral as well as the mental man. I attribute no small part of the unusual growth of the college to the confidence inspired in the parents that the character of the lad will not be neglected during the four years spent in acquiring knowledge."
