THE PROPER USE OF TITLES.

THE PROPER USE OF TITLES. For some time there has existed at Penn State a certain con-dition in regard to class room etiquette that might well be made the subject of a brief discussion. The condition referred to is the lack of discrimination shown by some students in addressing the members of the faculty by their proper titles. This disregard for proper distinctions in the use of titles is undoubtedly more notice-able among the students in the lower classes than among those who have reached their senior and junior years. Nearly all of us can probably hark back to our underclassmen days when everyone from the head of a department to the student assistant in the labor-atory was dignified with the title of professor. Now such a habit on the part of a student must be the result either of sheer ignorance or a desire to flatter the person addressed. In most cases it is probably the result of ignorance rather than a desire to flatter. But however that may be, the practice itself can-not be too severely condemmed. In the first place a title of honor becomes a mere empty phrase and in the second case there is no distinction made in according honor where honor is due. It would indeed be well for those who have heretofore paid scant attention to the matter, to remember that only members of the faculty who have obtained recognition as professors should be addressed by such a title; that only those men who have obtained doctors' degrees should be addressed by the title of doctor; and that other members of the faculty s' .ld be addressed simply in the manner which is used in addressing persons of more mature age. The subject which has been taken up in the foregoing paraage.

The subject which has been taken up in the foregoing para-The subject which has been taken up in the foregoing para-graphs may seem rather small and inconsequental in itself, but for all that a proper distinction in the use of titles is a mark of courtesy that no student should disregard, for by his attitude in this respect does he place himself among either the well-bred or the isometry the ignorant.

And now basketball leaps into prominence in college athletics with the football season gone into history. The two popular win-ter sports, basketball and wrestling, will bid for the interest and support of the student body. Strong schedules have been arranged by the respective managers of both sports and prospects point to teams of high caliber. On Saturday evening the basketball team will be seen in its opening game in the Armory against a strong opponent and at the very start we wish success to the Blue and White quintet.
