

Prexy's Preachment

When ex-President Taft's alma mater, Yale University, invited him to accept the chair of Constitutional Law in that institution, he agreed to lecture during the first three days of each week and to have the remaining four for any service to which he might think he ought to devote himself. His salary was sufficient to enable him to be idle during the three days if he felt so inclined, yet instead of enjoying his remaining days in reading and with his friends, he has been almost constantly before the people in various public causes, especially recently in the League to Enforce Peace, the League of Nations, the logical outcome, and, in newspaper writings and lectures.

"What shall we do with our ex-presidents?" has been frequently agitated. Congress has at various times had projects before it to pension them, to provide some easy office for them to realize a happy old age after the strain of executive duty. Taft has not tied the matter so far as he is concerned by leading a more strenuous and more beneficent public life after retirement than he led before. To do this, he deliberately rid himself of nearly a hundred pounds of superfluous flesh and this by sacrifice and denial is not a splendid thing to plan one's days to the finish and then have will power sufficient to carry out the plan!

In New York a few years ago, the billboards announced a play called "Cheating Cheaters". I liked the title for it is so often true. I believe we are as likely to cheat ourselves as another, although we always think of cheating the other. Yet he will rack his brain to devise some new way of cheating the teacher in a quiz in order to gain what? A higher mark. This mark does not set a false value on the teacher but on the student. He has taken counterfeit money knowingly. The cheater is cheated, or rather, he has cheated himself. If the teacher cheated him, he would raise a cry to heaven. Of course he always says that the subject in which he cheated was not essential to his course and to his future career. There must be many non-essentials in every course to judge by this alibi. Many years experience in seeing cheaters cheat themselves convince me that the practice is brought to college from earlier school days; that it is as much a childish disease as whooping cough; and that it would not be practiced if students would stop to think of the inevitable result, upon their habits and future standards. Why grow into the habit of cheating yourself? There are enough weeds in your human nature without your cultivating any more.

MORE SONGS CONTEST BRINGS GOOD RESULTS

The campaign started some time ago by the COLLEGIAN for the purpose of increasing the number of college songs at Penn State is at last beginning to bear fruit. Several good compositions have already been turned in, and practically all have the characteristics of songs well adapted for use at any occasion. Dean Robinson of the Department of Music is now at work putting on the finishing touches before submitting the mto the student body. One song in particular that has been handled in is especially good and is of the march type so much in favor at Princeton University. Any student wishing to submit a song can do so by sending it to this paper which is cooperating with the Department of Music in the matter. It is suggested that all songs be accompanied with words and that they be of such a nature as to make them suitable for singing at any event in which Penn State is a participant.

EX-SERVICE MEN RECEIVE SPECIAL SHORT COURSE

The School of Agriculture opened a special short course last Monday for men who have served the country in the recent world war. Between thirty and forty men are enrolled in this course which will include a study of soils, fertilizers, farm crops, live-stock and vegetables. The state branch of the Young Men's Christian Association is seeing these men through the course.

DEAN SACKETT EXPLAINS INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS

"Our Industrial Conditions" was the subject of the lecture given by Dean Sackett in the Liberal Arts Auditorium last evening. After discussing the rise in prices following the Civil War, he outlined other causes, not then present, which have conspired to produce our present labor unrest. The fallacies preached by labor and practiced by management were pointed out. The present issue is between the absolute autocracy of capital and the threatened autocracy of labor. The interests and rights of the public in this seem to be questionable.

The position taken by Dean Sackett may be indicated by the following quotation: "The American workman is too intelligent to submit longer to the absolute dominance of capital, and the American employer is likewise too just to desire longer to dominate in a country where autocracy in industry is wholly out of harmony with our democratic form of government. The sooner the management takes to its opportunity and takes the workman into its confidence, restores the personal touch in industry, develops welfare and personal worth, and recognizes labor as something more than a commodity, the sooner will some of our most pressing industrial problems be solved. No automatic machine-made solution will touch the underlying and fundamental weakness of our present labor program. Human sympathy, personal contact, judicious selection of employees, and acknowledgment of their ability and independence are the primary factors in the restoration of American industry to a sound economic basis.
