

FINANCIAL REPORT OF ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION

The report of the financial standing of the Athletic Association of the Pennsylvania State College for the year ending August 31, 1920, compiled by Graduate Manager Neil Fleming and approved by the Alumni Athletic Advisory Committee has been completed and is published herewith for the information of the students and alumni. The Association is now in a much healthier financial condition than was the case last year due probably to the return to normal conditions and now has a surplus of $10,464.85 and a net gain for the financial year of $3075.82.

As has been the case in the past, football was the only sport showing a profit, all the other sports, both major and minor, netting losses ranging from $4,569.00 to $121.29. It will also be noted that the team of $5,695.84 for improvements to New Beaver Field included only bills paid up to August 31, 1920.

NOVEL DANCES AND PARTIES MARKED THE LAST WEEK END

The women's dormitories were the scene of several interesting parties and dances last Friday evening. The Sophomore girls' class dance was held Saturday afternoon in the Women's Building. Friday evening Maple Lodge gave a dance, the recently organized Girls' Orchestra providing the music. A unique occasion was the "Favorite Age Party" given by the Derry Cottage girls Friday evening. All the guests were dressed in costumes representing their favorite ages and affording every opportunity for orkinality. Mere infants, youngsters of kindergarten and junior ages, and high school boys and girls joined in a series of progressive games suited to the various ages. Miss Edna Sell '21 presided over the kindergarten tables, Miss Ruth Nyer '22 directed junior games, and Miss Gertrude Middleton had charge of the older "chill den." The evening was filled with fun and frolic of all kinds and refreshments suitable in each age were served, carrying out the spirit of the party to the last detail.

"DICK" HARLOW DESCRIBES LABRADOR BIRD STUDIES

In a lecture which proved that in addition to being a great football coach and sportsman, he was also a first class naturalist, "Dick" Harlow spoke to the Country Life Club last Thursday evening in Old Chapel on the subject of "Birds of Northern Canada." The speech was filled with interesting anecdotes concerning his experiences of last summer, dealing in particular with a trip that he and three other naturalists took to the country of Labrador during the month of May. The purpose of the expedition was to discover things which are of general interest to the naturalist and in particular to follow and find the nests of several rare birds, one of which was the Arctic Three Toed Woodpecker. Mr. Harlow spoke at length upon the country of Labrador from a geographic standpoint, describing the extremely barren section where only coarse grass grows and contrasted it with the remainder of the country which is covered with huge forests.

In their search for the nest of an Arctic Three Toed Woodpecker the party hunted for days and were rewarded in the end by finding the much sought for prize. Other birds which they studied were the warbler, being of great deal of attention to the Cape May Warbler, which is a peculiar bird in order to find the nests of these birds it was necessary for the members of the party to have in baskets from the tops of very tall trees and carefully spy for hours upon the tops of the trees surrounding in this way several nests of these birds were found. "Dick" intimated that next to the two already mentioned the greatest bird of Labrador is the muskito, which is a pest much larger than those found in Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Labrador offers an interesting time to all men whether they be sportsmen, students of nature, fishermen, or hunters. Moose can be found in packs and beautiful fish can be caught by the dozen. The people encountered in this section of Canada are Scotch-Canadians and French-Canadians. Mr. Harlow stated that the former were the best hearted people that he ever met, while the latter were an active and yet different type from any encountered in other sections of the world. The country is beautiful, the people congenial, and the game abundant, making an ideal land for the sportsman.

CHANGES ARE MADE IN LIBERAL ARTS COURSES

Many important and extensive changes will feature the courses in the Liberal Arts School after the close of this semester. These changes are not confined to any one class or course but will be included in all classes and courses.

Perhaps the most important will be the reduction of the number of credits for the freshman year and the large number of electives that characterize the following years. Hereafter, the credits for each semester of the freshman year will be limited to fifteen, exclusive of Hygiene, Military Science, and Physical Education. Another important change in the schedule concerns the number of credits in scientific subjects which has been increased. All sophomores will be required to have six credits of science at the end of the second year, three credits to be secured in each term. However, electives in science will predominate in the second semester for Liberal Arts students will have a choice in taking Bacteriology, Physics, Botany, or Zoology in the second year, specialization will be required instead of in the junior year as has previously been the case.

In order to insure the greatest freedom of choice throughout the school, all courses have been changed. Two courses will be offered in the course of Education and Psychology. Teacher Training has been instituted as a separate option to meet the great demand for teachers in the state. The other option will be Psychology and Philosophy.

There will be three options in the course of Modern Languages. In the past these options have not been clearly divided as they are now scheduled to be. The options will be German, English, and Romance languages in the Pre-Legal Course in History and Political Science, a sharp distinction will be drawn between the purely pre-legal option and that of Economics and

PLAYERS' OFFERING IS WELL KNOWN COMEDY

While "Seven Keys to Baldpate" was enjoying a successful run at the Astor Theatre, New York, in 1914, Walter Pichard Eaton expressed his opinion as follows in an article contributed to the American Magazine: "One of the best of the native offerings, perhaps, is a dramatization made by G. M. Cohen of Earl Derr Biggers' rollicking novel 'Seven Keys to Baldpate.' Mr. Cohen calls it a 'mystery play,' which is a good name for a new thing—or almost a new thing. Think of being able to create something new in the theatre! Those who have read the story will recall that it tells the adventures of one Billie Macree, a writer of melodramatic best-sellers, who goes up to a deserted summer hotel (Baldpate Inn) in the depth of winter to secure the quiet needed to write a really serious and worthy book. No sooner has he arrived, however, thinking that he has the only key to the inn, when a second key turns in the lock, and before long Billie finds himself involved in about the most fantastically melodramatic story ever imagined, which makes his own best-sellers look tame and realistic. There can be no question of the rare skill of his (Mr. Cohen a melodrama, which at the same time is a farce during the bulk of the play. The play is exciting and it is funny. It is like a detective story and like a mad romp at the same time. More-over the setting and atmosphere are very unusual—the bare totinia of a deserted summer hotel, the howl of the winter storm outside, the feeling of damp chill and dark, mysterious rooms lying above and on every side. Such words of praise coming from one of our foremost dramatic critics can signify only one thing—that the play is well worth seeing. It has often been said that the public likes nothing better than to be fooled. If that is true then 'Seven Keys to Baldpate' will find instant favor with its State College audience. Those who have never seen this production before have in store for them an evening of thrills and surprises which will send them home after the final curtain in a very happy frame of mind while those who were fortunate enough to see the play as Mr. Cohen staged it eight years ago will no doubt be delighted with the faithful reproduction to be presented by the Penn State Players on February eleventh. Mail orders for seats are now being filled as rapidly as they are received, and the large advance sale indicates a lively interest in this performance. Make use of the coupon that has been provided and having your favorably received orders sent. Orders may be sent to David D. Mason, 218 Main Building.
