RESPECT AND CHIVALRY

Not long ago the committee from Student Council delegated to make seating arrangements in the Armory for indoor meets aside a certain number of seats for women students, faculty members, seniors and letter men. Signs were posted over the sections reserved, and it was expected that these provisions would be lived up to. It had been decided that when the contest began all seats then available might be occupied by those standing. Experience gained during the past week or ten days has already taught us that there are those among our number, in all the classes, who find it a very hard matter to respect either signs or provisions drawn up by representatives of the student governing body.

The conduct of a number of students last Saturday evening at the boxing tournament was certainly contrary to all that it should have been. As soon as the section of the seating stand set aside for male students had been filled, they began filling the portion set aside for the women and their escorts. This section was also filled before the first woman appeared at the meet. Fortunately there were gentlemen in the crowd who gave up their seats immediately. Others were more loath to give up their advantage. Later, as more women came, student sentiment in the other sections forced seating room for them in the very section allotted for that purpose. Most of the women did obtain seats at length, but some were forced to be seated on the floor while men students remained in the stands. That was a very fine example of chivalry. Had the men been wise, they would have remained out of the women's section, and all the fuss and commotion that came later would have been avoided. It certainly was a wonderful exhibition of Penn State spirit to a visitor, to a returning alumnus, to the remainder of students in the other sections.

Again, the sections set aside for seniors and letter men are being filled by underclassmen and men who have not been so fortunate as to gain the coveted "S". Here again a lack of respect is shown, both toward the letter man and toward the man who is partaking of the joys of his last year at Penn State.

It is truly unfortunate that Penn State must be hampered with such accommodations. Here, in the Nittany hills, above all other institutions in the state, where the student is so situated in respect to amusements and wholesome diversions in his leisure, and where the wonderful traditions and spirit of by-gone days fills everyone to such an extent that he gladly, eagerly partakes of every opportunity, athletic and otherwise, that presents itself, we should have a building where he may be comfortably accommodated. However, until we do obtain such a building, it were best for all concerned if the arrangements of the committees in charge be respected and carried out.

The COLLEGIAN believes that Penn State men have enough sense of justice and respect that they will observe the rules to their fullest extent. May we not be mistaken in the future.

COOKING FOR MEN

Much interest has recently been aroused by the announcement that this institution is to offer a course in cooking that is open to men students. The course is to be known as "Domestic Science 53" and will have as its object the teaching of the nutritive values of foodstuffs with a special emphasis on camp cookery.

As is the case in many instances similar in nature, the idea was greeted at first with some skepticism. However, to those who have thought it over, it has evidenced itself as being a very fine thing and to the average college man very often a great aid in future life. It is no more out of place for a man to cook than it is for a woman to work at occupations filled by men before the war. The man who can prepare a meal and do it well will always be in demand on a fishing or hunting trip and also find that he has something which will be worth while to him when he goes alone on such expeditions or is lost from his party.

Again, cooking is a well-paid occupation and even if the average student has no intention whatever of making use of his knowledge in this fashion, it cannot come amiss. When this proposition is brought directly home, we can safely say that any man, no matter what his college course, will find the knowledge to his advantage. The forester, especially he who rides alone on weary trails, whose guardianship extends over square miles of state and private timber reserves; the engineer, in particular he who aids in clearing vast forces of nature so that civilization may advance into new lands; the missionary, the explorer, all find during the course of their travels that their knowledge of the culinary art, no matter how crude, is a big factor in their work of advancing the information of the world.

The course that is to be given at Penn State by the Department of Home Economics will by no means make professional cooks out of the students electing it, but it will give them something which will prove beneficial to them, most likely when they least expect it to do so.

REGISTRAR ANNOUNCES LIST OF GRADUATES

Revised List Contains Names of Seventy Men and Three Women—Five More to Get M. S.

A revised list of the candidates for graduation at the Mid-year Convocation, Tuesday night, February first, has been completed at the Registrar's Office and now includes seventy-three names, three of which are women. Of this number, sixty-six will receive the degree of Bachelor of Science and seven will gain the Bachelor of Arts degree. One woman and four men will also receive their Master of Science degree at the same time. Four schools and the Department of Home Economics are represented on the list of candidates. The School of Agriculture with thirty-one to receive degrees leads the others in the number to graduate. However, Engineering School make a close second. The other schools which have candidates for graduation are: School of Liberal Arts, School of Natural Science, School of Mining, and the Department of Home Economics.

As previously announced, the graduation exercises will take place Tuesday night, February first, at seven-thirty o'clock in the Auditorium. The graduating class will assemble in the Foyer at seven o'clock and at that time the Marshal will arrange for the seating so that they may pass to and from the platform to receive their diplomas with the least possible disturbance. The whole affair will be conducted in a quiet and simple manner. There will neither be a formal processional or recessional and the graduates will not wear any academic costume at this time or at the Baccalaureate Sermon which will occur Sunday, January thirtieth in the Auditorium at the regular chapel hour. Reverend Harris Ely Adrinco, D. D., will deliver the sermon to the graduates in the evening. Seats for the seating class will be seated in the front part of the middle block of seats. The list of candidates for graduation at the Mid-year Convocation as prepared by the Registrar is as follows:

MUSIC DEPARTMENT OFFERS NEW COURSES
 Second semester courses in Music Appreciation, Music 3, and in Advanced Harmony, Music 3, have been arranged by the Music Department and are open to all students. The course in Music Appreciation is rewarded by one credit and is designed to develop the musical sensibilities of the student to appreciate good music and to enable him to recognize worthwhile music. A fifty cent fee is required. This course may be scheduled by election and will be given Wednesday afternoons at one-thirty.
 Advanced Harmony is also a one credit subject and must be scheduled by appointment. No fee is required.
 A recital will be given by the students in the Department of Music during the first week of the second semester for which the pupils are now preparing. This concert will be free and the public is invited. The Department of Music wishes to announce that facilities for the instruction in violin have made it possible for the formation of a beginners class in the playing of this instrument. The class will also start with the new semester.

PENN STATE PROFESSOR TO LECTURE ON TRACTORS
 Professor R. U. Blainsham of the School of Agriculture will deliver two lectures at the Sixth Annual National Tractor Show which is to be held at Columbus, Ohio, during the week of Feb. seventh to the twelfth. On the tenth of February he will talk on "Community Purchase of Tractors," and on February eleventh he will lecture about "The Tractor in Winter." These two lectures are part of a four day lecture program which has been designed as a "College Course in Tractor Training" composed into "Four Days." This course is presented by a number of authorities on the use of the tractor in order to show the eastern farmers the advantages and possibilities of the extended use of the tractor on small farms such as prevail throughout this section of the country. The show itself will be the biggest affair of its nature ever attempted. The fact that it is to be held as far east as Ohio shows that the tractor is becoming more universal in this part of the country.
