

WELFARE WORKER URGES UNIVERSAL EDUCATION

Rev. Lovejoy, Secretary of National Child Labor Committee, Gives Forensic Chapel Address

Working out the steps toward the solution of American education in relation to childhood, Reverend Owen R. Lovejoy, General Secretary of the National Child Labor Committee, of New York City, brought out many facts concerning illiteracy and the education of children that were of special interest to students last Sunday morning at the upper class chapel service.

Even after fifteen years of campaign and work for child education, there are still two million children between the ages of ten and fifteen who will probably never enter any elementary school.

One of the fallacies, even among the educated, is that feeling democracy, the proper sort of government in the field of education is an autocracy.

In the last twenty-five years America has been engaged in the greatest migration in the history of the world, even greater than that of the time of the middle ages when the nomads of Asia and the Germanic tribes swept into the Roman Empire and caused its ruin.

These farmers are poor and uneducated and the cities there are filled. "Something must be done so that the people will wish to remain in the rural districts, contented and prosperous."

The solution that we must have is universal education. It is not the unskilled laborer who is the problem, it is the unskilled laborer who is the problem.

If people are to have this education, it must be an American education. This does not mean that we should try to teach people how to dress and speak nor to sing the national anthem.

and expect them to abide by our teachings, for they have their own opinions on the subject. Instead, the different races should cooperate, getting together and exchanging experiences and views.

We should not be impressed because America is spending millions for education but because in this country there are about a million and a half illiterates.
