

COLLEGE GIVES PRESIDENT THOMAS WARM RECEPTION

(Continued from first page) were backing Doctor Thomas and how they considered him the unanimous choice for the responsible position that he occupies. He recalled an incident that showed the confidence that the trustees repose in him. The Judge said that when a committee of the trustees went to Vermont to interview the prospective president of Penn State they conferred with him for several hours. At the end of the conference, Doctor Thomas arose and left. As he passed down the corridor, the trustees sat silent, each waiting for the others to speak to see what impression had been created in the mind of the others. At last, almost as one man, each exclaimed "Well, there is some man."

PLAYERS ACT WELL IN FRENCH COMEDY

(Continued from first page) role of Catharine, the dumb wife and the latter acted the part of Master Simon Colline, the doctor, who tossed the tongue of the former. The other members of the cast did equally as well in parts which were of less prominence, but which were essential to the general theme and action of the story. E. Helmreich '24, Frances Hewston '24 and Sara E. Koerber '22 are all deserving of a considerable amount of credit for the success of the performance. As a complete surprise to the audience, two other one act plays were presented: "The Glistening Gate," by Lord Dunsany, and "The Noble Lord," by Percival Wilde. The first of these, a play of the supernatural, consisted of two characters, both before the gates of Heaven and seeking entrance. The part of Jim, lately a burglar, was played by H. Elliot Taylor '21, and Bill also lately a burglar was played by Thomas G. McCollum. The second one act play, "The Noble Lord," set near a hotel in the Maine woods consisted of three characters. "He" was portrayed by Rayman G. Adams, '21, "She" by Sara E. Koerber '22, and "Peters," by Thomas G. McCollum '23.
