FATHERS' DAY

The large number of fathers who came to take part in Penn State's newest holiday, Fathers' Day, made it such a success that the affair is sure to become an annual event. The campus was filled with the parents of the students getting an insight into the life of the men and women of Penn State and also obtaining a view of the plant provided by the state for the instruction of its youth. The number of fathers who attended exceeded all expectations, and showed the desire of the fathers and sons for a closer relationship during their college days. Opportunities for mutual understanding were offered and taken advantage of, and the fathers entered right into the life of their sons and daughters.

Being initiated and conducted wholly by the student body through a student committee, the idea spread like wild-fire over the campus. It took hold immediately and everyone made sure that if nothing prevented, his father would be in attendance, extending a personal invitation to come to the college as the guest of his son, to go to classes with him, to go to the baseball game, to attend the rousing mass meeting which developed such enthusiasm, and to take part in the numerous smokers. The affair was an instantaneous success and will no doubt become an established custom at the college from now on.

A great deal of credit is due to the student committee headed by R. R. Burtner '22 for the manner in which all the arrangements were made and for the successful observance of the affair. The idea was a new one to the college as a whole and the success of the committee in planning an event of this magnitude speaks well for the broad vision of the men composing it.

One way in which the spirit of Penn State could be improved is a revival of the habit of speaking to every other student whether you have been formally introduced to him or not. It is required by college custom that every Freshman shall speak to every other member of the first year class, in order that he may become better acquainted with his class mates. Why not carry this a little farther and bring every man under the custom? It would knit the student body closer together and act as nothing else would do to increase the friendly Penn State spirit.

It has been brought to our attention that some of the less civilized members of our student body are indulging in the filthy habit of expectorating tobacco juice in the college buildings. This is something that no decent man who has any pride in himself, in the college, on any regard for others will do, and it must be stopped immediately.

PRESIDENT THOMAS GIVES CHAPEL SPEECH

New Head of College Speaks to Two Large Audiences of Students and Visiting Fathers

Both chapel audiences, including many of the students fathers were addressed by President Thomas, who took for his text the story of the prodigal son, found in Luke 15:11, the use of freedom granted to young men and women. Yesterday was the first appearance of President Thomas as Sunday chapel speaker, and his sermon was couched with unusual interest, everyone feeling the teachings of his message and admiring his method of presenting it.

In opening his sermon, President Thomas stated that the prodigal son in the Bible and in many other cases, deserved sympathy and credit for his desire to strike out for himself and paddle his own canoe. Especially is this true at an early age in life, for it is then that a man begins to do his work well. He cannot make a success when he is hampered by the advice and authority of parents and friends, no matter how kind may be their intentions. "Boys get tired of being boys," said President Thomas, referring to the many statements that childhood days are the happiest times of one's life; the embarrassments and awkwardness from which every boy suffers. This brings about the desire to become a man and to stand on his own feet. So childhood becomes the receptive age and during this period we must learn to adjust ourselves to the world. In this transition period, the youth needs much sympathy and help.

When a youth sets out in life as did the prodigal son, it is not through evil intentions, but he is trying to find himself, to get on his own feet. In this period of freedom is his only chance to build up his principles and ideas, no matter how much they have been taught to him in earlier years. But, although this attempt to get away from restraint and go it alone is praiseworthy, the individual must be honest with himself. This liberty or freedom, it must be remembered, is not the privilege to drift along, accomplishing nothing, but to do what he wants to do, to do things with a purpose, doing only what is right.

The condition of the world at present in all sections shows the necessity for a better world which can only be accomplished by better men and stronger men. Men of stronger body and clearer mind who can convince the masses of the right and then put it through. In closing, President Thomas again emphasized the fact that freedom is given to us to give us a chance to show what kind of men we are and what we stand for.
