

THE DUNBAR QUARTET

That gay, stringed world of gold
That sobbed and sang and laughed
With you
And as I watched your slender tapering fingers
Finding their way across the mellow strings,
I heard a song that seemed to come
Not from your brilliant, golden chords,
But from your soul
And then I knew that all the while The golden strings were thrilling to your passionate touch
You were but playing
Upon the strings of my own heart

I do not know your name—
Nor care
You came into my night
And played upon my life strings
And ere now, have gone again
I listened to your minor strain
And there beheld my thoughts, my joys, my hopes Crying with their imprisoned strength Expression seeking in you theme
And in your major, crashing harmonies Vibrated ambition—
Powerful, fervent in its night—
The thrilling—quivering—glowing—luring
In its melody of flight

Yet there was still another note I caught
When soft you'd play
So gently would your fingers touch the chords
That I might close mine eyes And hear the angels singing in your stead—
Singing my song
Of love and tender sympathy.

Your harp is still—
And you have gone
It matters not—for in passing
You have left your song.

GRADUATE'S LITERARY ABILITY RECOGNIZED

Poem by J. Gordon Amend Will be Published in New Volume of Poets of the Future

Penn State has been distinguishing itself again along literary lines and the most recent honor is the announcement that a poem by J. Gordon Amend has been chosen to be included in the 1921 volume of Poets of the Future—A College Anthology.

This is the second time that a poem by Mr. Amend has been selected for the anthology. Last year, "To My Mother," appeared among verses from 72 other colleges and universities.

"THE AFFAIRS OF ANATOL" Think of "Mile and Fo-mile" Of "Why Change Your Wife" Of "Forbidden
Fruit"
Then try to imagine a story greater than any of these—stronger, more unusual, more thrilling.
Imagine scores of settings, every one of them more elaborate, more daring, more luxurious than anything you have ever seen on the screen.
Now imagine twelve of the best known players in America, working under the magic direction of De Mille.
If you can imagine one superlative picture with all this—and more—you will have a slight idea of "The Affairs of Anatol."
