WE WELCOME THE DADS

Again Penn State has the honor of entertaining the fathers. The Dads that arrive today and tomorrow are coming to the college at the express invitation of this institution. We welcome them as our guests; we offer them the keys of the college and campus as friends of Penn State; and we promise them a good time and an enjoyable week-end as a comrade and bosom companion.

The place that the Father holds in the average American household is one of honor, respect and good fellowship. He is the recognized head of the family and as such is vitally interested in the welfare of that little group bound together with the closest of ties. With the passage of time comes the stage in the life of every young person when the opportunities offered by the home town are not great enough to supply the desire and the young man or the young lady leaves home in the quest of higher education or industrial advancement. Then follow those years of separation when the family tie binds as tightly as before and when the full realization of the power of home and the greatness of parental love impressing itself upon the one far away. A longing to see those faces and a desire to treat them to the joys and thrills of college life invariably arises in the heart of every student many times a year. A chance to have a confidential chat and to enjoy the close communion that can exist only between a person and his parents is potent at times.

The institution of Father's Day last year was designed to fill this void in student life and its initial success was such as to insure a repetition of its observance. The time selected this year does not meet with favor on the part of all students, but circumstances have decreed that the day must be when it will suit the majority. It is indeed unfortunate that the fathers of the Seniors may not be able to come to Penn State both at Commencement and for this week-end. Therefore it becomes the exacting duty of the members of the three under classes to produce such a showing that will prove they have carried on a successful coaxing campaign.

The program as arranged by the committee is an excellent one and is planned to provide only that which is the most desirable. One of the most attractive features to Dad is a visitation to class. He wants to see how the class is conducted and if he is a college man, he will want to see if they do it the same now as they formally did. He wants to see the student and the instructor in their native element—as they really are in the every day American college life. Dad wants to experience that youthful feeling again that accompanies the sight of a classroom. Recitations will be held as usual Saturday morning for the purpose of giving the student an opportunity to take his father to class.

The athletic games in the afternoon and the mass meeting in the evening will serve to demonstrate to Dad the characteristics of Penn State spirit as exemplified at work and at play. This should make permanent that youthful feeling acquired earlier in the day and should counteract successfully the business cares that have been accumulating since Father's Day last year. And the end of a perfect day will come at the various smokers when Dad will light up the old pipe or cigar, lean back in an easy chair, and tell the young boys how they did it when he went to school.

Fathers—we welcome you to Penn State. We trust that you will enjoy the spirit of the Blue and White and that the enjoyment that is sure to be yours will more than amply repay you. We are mighty glad you are with us.

WHY NOT A MOTHER'S DAY?

It has often been said that "the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world" and it is just as true to say that "the hand which rocks the cradle rules the heart". Mother has ever been associated with that which is highest and best in ideals and virtues. No loyalty is greater than that of a Mother's; no love is greater and no influence is more far-reaching than that of a Mother, and no patience can ever be imagined which can compare with that which a Mother exercises in training her child. The nation recognizes the greatness of Motherhood and honors it by setting aside one day each year to pay tribute to their nobility.

As yet Penn State has not instituted a Mother's Day as it has a Father's Day and a step of this kind would surely receive the hearty commendation of each student. This week-end, Mother is patiently waiting at home for news of the son or of the daughter at the return of Father and no invitation has been extended to her to visit the college. And she remains at home, not because she does not possess the esteem of all, but merely because Penn State has neglected to set aside a day when the Mothers can be suitably entertained as are the Fathers. This is a matter worthy of consideration. Let not our past neglect extend into the future.

WE WANT NEWS

The size of the college and the fact that the staff of the COLLEGIAN is expected to carry a regular course besides publishing the paper twice a week makes it impossible for the reporters to secure all news at the college that is of interest to alumni, faculty and students. It is the duty of secretaries of campus organizations, classes, and societies to send notices to the COLLEGIAN concerning the activities of their respective groups.

This publication is dedicated to the college and to the student body and wishes to serve to the greatest degree attainable, but this is impossible if responsible students do not take an interest in their paper and in the work of their respective groups. Any notices that are in the COLLEGIAN office will receive recognition and any news item will be welcomed. We urge the student body to take advantage of this suggestion and to forsake the practices of the past in this regard.

BACTERIOLOGY HEAD AIDS IN STAIN INVESTIGATIONS

Methods of Staining Bacteria for Microscopic Work Will Be Improved

Professor Charles A. Hunter, head of the Bacteriology Department at Penn State, working in cooperation with several others and with The American Society of Bacteriologists, has recently completed a series of tests on methods of staining bacteria for microscopic work. These tests were of considerable importance, and an account of the experiments recently appeared in "The Journal of Bacteriology."

Heretofore it has been necessary to obtain stains for bacteriological purposes, from Germany, and for the past several years The American Society of Bacteriologists has undertaken a study of the American stains in an effort to standardize them and improve them for biological use. The National Research Council, calling the value of the work and the success with which it was proceeding, took over the task, and has been aiding in the investigation of American materials and their ability to stain bacteria. Progress along this line has been very satisfactory. A large number of methylene blue stains from American manufacturers have been tested, and samples have been found that give much better results than the best brand of German staining material. The American Society of Bacteriologists is now able to advise biologists where reliable stains may be purchased.

MISSING MAY DAY FETE TO BE HELD NEXT WEEK

The third annual May Day Fete of the girls will be held on the Women's Building next Wednesday afternoon, May 24th, at four-thirty o'clock. This is the first time that it has been held out-of-doors and it is expected that much will be added by making it an open air party. The program will start with the crowning of the May Queen and then will follow a May pole and several other dances and music by the Glee Club and quartet.

In the event of inclement weather on Thursday the Fete will be held on Thursday at the same hour.

CO-EDS STAGE THEIR FIRST FORMAL DINNER

Toasts, Singing and Presentations of "Suppressed Desires" Feature Event

The girls of the college introduced a new feature into their program of social events last Tuesday evening by holding a formal dinner in McAllister Hall. The dining room was decorated for the occasion and looked like a flower garden due to the absence of any window curtains. After the dinner, Miss Marion Thompson, '22, presided as mistress of ceremonies and stated the program with a toast to Dean Knight. After general singing of college songs the Glee Club gave several numbers. Representatives of the three lower classes were called on for speeches and Laura Calk, '23, Alicia Purdie, '24 and Milam Herr, '25, responded with short talks and toasts for the Seniors. The Girls' Varsity Quartet sang and then followed the main feature of the program, the presentation of the one-act play, "Suppressed Desires" by several of the Penn State Divas. This play is an amusing satire on psycho-analysis and was received by a most appreciative audience.

The dinner was a decided success and the girls hope to make it an established custom for coming years. They are endeavoring to build a tradition around all-scholar activities and customs in order to unite themselves into a student body of their own and to make it a real and active unit in college affairs.

PRE-LEGAL STUDENTS HOLD YEAR'S ELECTIONS

The members of the Pre-Legal Club met last Tuesday evening at the Sigma Xi House and elected officers for the coming year, the ballots resulting as follows: President, J. C. Dolan, '22; vice-president, G. A. Barnett, '24; secretary-treasurer, J. J. Gelse, '24. The new officers will take up their duties immediately.

Paul Price, one of the "Big Ten" co-representatives at the Peace Conference, and now attached to the President's Office on Publicity Campaign work, gave the address of the evening. Mr. Price who is a correspondent at the front during the war, besides attending the Peace and Disarmament conferences, was well fitted for the subject he presented, "The Leaders of the International Conferences."

An outline of the address follows: "During the Peace Conference at Paris, President Wilson demanded that all treaties be open and above board, but reporters attended the conference and created a new phase of the situation, since diplomats began to use the reporters to further their own interests by the nations they represented. But it the Disarmament Conference at Washington the reporters of all nations were herded together and compelled to send in unbiased reports."

"The policy of publicity in international disputes was inaugurated at the Paris Conference by Colonel House and carried on by Secretary Hughes, and it is put forth that this policy will be one of the main factors in the solution of such affairs in the future."
Hughes, Balfour, Lord Rydell and other leaders at the Washington Conference, were discussed by Mr. Price, whose main purpose was to point out that until we secure absolute publicity, at international conferences, the latter will not be successful.
