NO SPECIAL TRAINS

The meeting of Student Council which was held last Tuesday night will probably prove to be of no little interest to the student body since items of business were considered which affect every individual student. At this time, the subject of special trains was discussed.

The Pennsylvania Railroad submitted a proposal whereby a reduction of fifty percent on the regular train fare to Philadelphia would be given in case a special train of five hundred students could be run. A reduction of forty percent would be given for a train of four hundred, and a reduction of thirty percent for a train of three hundred. Student Council acted wisely in rejecting this proposition.

According to traffic regulations, the movement of any special train must take place within twenty four hours. This would mean that the train would have to leave Philadelphia at six o'clock in the morning after the Penn game if the train left Lemont at six o'clock the preceding morning. Council thought that few students would care to attend the football game under these conditions. Also, there are many who desire to travel the road, which would make it difficult to secure a reasonable number of customers. In case the original number was not reached, then it would be necessary to levy an additional assessment to comply with the changed percentage. Thus the work and the responsibility which would devolve upon those in charge would be entirely out of proportion to the benefit derived. These conditions apply in regard to securing special trains for other football contests, but not in regard to holiday trains since the latter are run by the railroad company for its own convenience.

Thus it is seen that the disadvantages far outweigh the advantages and unless a more desirable proposal is forthcoming, Student Council is perfectly justified in its decision.

CHANGING CUSTOMS

For some time, it was believed by many that one weakness of Penn State's customs was the apparent unequal distribution of class scraps over the year. The fall was neglected entirely when the dates for class scraps have been set and all interclass tussles were crowded into the spring of the year. But such will not be the case this year, Student Council has decreed that the tie-up scrap shall be held on October twenty-eighth. At this time, there will be no other attraction on the campus, except the returns of the Syracuse-Penn State game and these two will in no way conflict.

This action is but the first step in a movement to revise the whole set as printed in the freshman handbook. At the present time, there are many customs printed in the handbook that have become obsolete. A separation of the good from the bad is necessary.

This would, by no means, suggest that leniency be grafted into present day customs. On the contrary, Penn State should support a set of customs, sensible in nature, which would be strictly enforced, which would include many regulations that are popular at the present time, and which would not be infected with barbarous practices.

OUR POST-OFFICE

Since the beginning of the semester when the students returned and saw the Penn State postoffice in its changed form, there has been a constant murmuring against those who are guilty of making the present arrangements. The structure was small enough and the accommodations insufficient enough before the change in entrance was effected but now they border upon the disgraceful. Why should a town the size of State College be so punished?

Enough mail passes through the local post-office to warrant far better facilities. It is not a rash statement to make that there are many towns in this state that have better postal service and postal accommodations than State College and are not as large. Why is this condition allowed to exist?

If it be impossible to secure a larger building, steps should be taken to enlarge the entrance, at least.

TRIBUNAL NEWS

Hereafter the proceedings of the Student Tribunal will be published in The Penn State Collegian, according to a ruling passed by Student Council this week. This is intended to arouse the interest of the student body in the work of this group.

The meetings of the Tribunal are in no way secret, yet such would seem to be the case. Rarely are there any spectators at the trials that are held although each student has the privilege of attending these if he wishes. This has led to indifference on the part of the average student who has neglected to enforce customs as they should be. This condition reached its height last year when a minimum of cases was reported to the Tribunal.

However, this year, a change for the better has occurred and cases are being reported every week. This shows that customs do not command the fear they deserve. It has been thought that the punishment of publicity which would attend each trial would cause a student to think twice before disobeying customs and, at the same time, it would arouse interest in the work of this organization.

DARTMOUTH "HEELERS" DO MANAGERIAL WORK. Dartmouth has a peculiar system for the choosing of managers for the different sports. At a recent meeting of the Sophomore class, twenty-five "heelers" were chosen for this work, from a list of over a hundred. Fifteen assistants are to be chosen in the Spring.

Campus Gossip

Welcome alumni!

You claimed Penn State long before we did, so we're glad to help celebrate Alumni Home-Coming Day with you.

We want you to paint the town red, including some of the white space on the campaign thermometer.

And this is a good time to subscribe for the COLLEGIAN. (Advertisement)

We have discovered a new use for the prof who delivers cut and dried lectures.

Let him broadcast bedtime stories from the Penn State radio station.

Score two against the absent minded professor.

We read of one notable who was a university professor for six years and didn't know it.

Our other prize-winning prof walks into the wrong room and gives part of a freshman lecture to seniors.

We Thank You

At last the gentle reader has been aroused to action. "When we run out of funny material, we're going to publish some freshman themes," was a comment appearing in this column last week. "Fuh, that's the first time I knew there was funny stuff in the column," is the retort of one of our readers.

We thank you. It encourages us to think that somebody besides ourselves reads this column.

If somebody would contribute something to us it would save us a lot of work.

And it might even be funny!

When Scholarship Day comes around next week it will take a lot of explaining to tell why we didn't get one of those medals.

We will the football in the Middlebury is an explanation which our Pennsylvania Dutch friend gives to tomorrow's contest.

We're getting our chapel practicum in early this year in anticipation of a long hard winter.

Personally we yearn for the Old Main clock to turn back to our freshman days.

Why not say "Hello" even if you aren't a frosh? Get acquainted with the rest of the college.

Hymnet of Praise

For peace among immortals great I hereby rise to nominate Lucius C. McGilligan Walte, Who never cuts his class at eight. —Princetonian

The "Y" Lost and Found Department announces that a Lion and Healy trombone case trimmed in nickel, lined with blue plush, containing a silver plated horn with a dent in the tuning slide, which had a one-piece music lyre was taken from the front of the band room in the basement of Old Main. In order to check this kind of thievery the "Y" is offering a reward of five dollars to anyone who will give the Lost and Found Department any information concerning the whereabouts of the articles or concerning the person who took them.

ENTOMOLOGISTS FIGHT PEACH BARK DISEASE

The Department of Entomology has been conducting a number of very interesting and valuable experiments during the last few months in an attempt to discover a method of combating the peach bark disease. The experiments under way at the present time deal with the use of paradichlorobenzene, a chemical which has been used without much success for several years and whose true value has been only recently discovered.

During the last year, the Department has conducted forty-three demonstrations in twenty-one different counties of Pennsylvania to show the farmers the use of this chemical in curing the peach bark disease. As a result of these demonstrations, it is estimated that more than seventy thousand trees have been saved by the use of paradichlorobenzene, with a saving of nearly eleven thousand dollars. Similar demonstrations have been given this year with even more success.

In addition to this work on peach bark, the Entomology Department has been conducting experiments on a serious grape vine disease.
